A mortgagor not a resident of the state in which property is situated may, under a statute of that state so permitting, acknowledge the mortgage at his residence before any officer there authorized to take acknowledgments;⁴⁵ but a mortgage acknowledged within a state by one not a resident thereof is rendered invalid by a statutory requirement that a mortgage be acknowledged before an officer at the place where the mortgagor resides.⁴⁶

Under statutory provisions that chattel mortgages shall be acknowledged as are conveyances of land, and that acknowledgments of deeds to realty shall be before a justice of the peace of the county in which the realty is situated, acknowledgment of such mortgage must be before a justice residing in the county where the chattels are situated, even though the owner is domiciled in another county.⁴⁷

Under the Illinois statute governing the place of acknowledgment, which statute has been said to have been changed many times,⁴⁸ acknowledgment must be before a justice of the peace, or a county judge, of the place of the mortgagor's residence.⁴⁹ In the application of the statute, recitals or representations as to the place of the mortgagor's residence are not conclusive.⁵⁰

(3) Who May Make

It has been held that only the mortgagor can acknowledge a chattel mortgage, except where a statute authorizes acknowledgment under a power of attorney.

Decisions in at least one jurisdiction are to the effect that only the mortgagor can acknowledge a chattel mortgage, acknowledgment for him by a third person, including an attorney in fact, being insufficient,⁵¹ unless such acknowledgment comes within the operation of a statute authorizing acknowledgment under a power of attorney;⁵² and certification by a justice of the peace of the acknowledgment of a mortgagor who did not appear before him or acknowledge the instrument is of no effect.⁵³

Acknowledgment prior to statute

A mortgage acknowledged by an attorney in fact under a power of attorney prior to the enactment of a statute authorizing such acknowledgment is invalid as to those not parties or privies thereto.—Baldwin Co. v. Keeley, 198 Ill.App. 287.

Acknowledgment before deputy clerk

An acknowledgment by an attorney in fact before a deputy clerk of court, in the name of the clerk, is proper, even though his power of attorney authorizes his appearance before the clerk of the court.—Albert Pick & Co. v. Spoor, 212 Ill.App. 612.

A chattel mortgage containing a clause appointing an attorney in fact to acknowledge it is valid where the mortgagor acknowledged the instrument before an officer empowered to take the acknowledgment of the appointment but not of the mortgage, and the attorney in fact later executed an acknowledgment before the proper officer.—Merchants' & Manufacturers' Securities Co. v. Graydon, 248 Ill.App. 201.

sent of husband and wife, it is not necessary that both join in the acknowledgment of the mortgage.⁵⁴

(4) Who May Take

Statutory provisions as to the officers who may take acknowledgments must be complied with.

Statutory provisions prescribing the officers before whom chattel mortgages are required to be acknowledged have been applied in several cases.⁵⁵ As more fully appears in §§ 52-57 of the C.J.S. title Acknowledgments, the officer is ordinarily required to be a disinterested party in order that the act may be valid.⁵⁶

Acknowledgment before a de facto officer has been held valid.⁵⁷

(5) Certificate

- (a) In general
- (b) Signature and seal of officer
- (c) Acknowledgment by corporation

(a) In General

In determining the sufficiency of a certificate of acknowledge of a chattel mortgage, it is to be fairly and reasonably construed. Where no form is prescribed, the certificate need only identify and attest the mortgagor's signature. Pertinent statutory provisions as to the content of the certificate must be complied with.

The form of the certificate of acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage has been said to be immaterial where the substantial directions of the law are observed.⁵⁸ In determining the sufficiency of the certificate, a fair and reasonable construction should be placed on it;⁵⁹ but a certificate regular in form, if shown to be false, makes the mortgage void as to creditors of the mortgagor⁶⁰ and third persons acting in good faith.⁶¹ Redundancy or surplusage does not vitiate the certificate,⁶² nor does a mistake in date as to the year when the acknowledgment was taken.⁶³ Where no form of certificate is prescribed, a certificate of acknowledgment need only identify and attest the mortgagor's signature,⁶⁴ and may be in the form of an affidavit by the mortgagor.⁶⁵

In some jurisdictions, a certificate of acknowledgment must show that the mortgagor himself acknowledged the mortgage.⁶⁶ Where the statute so

Use of wrong form

The mere fact that the officer who took an acknowledgment by the mortgagor used the form of certificate for an acknowledgment by an attorney in fact does not render the acknowledgment insufficient.—Ohio Power Shovel Co. v. Bond, 267 Ill. App. 271.

Mixed mortgage; relinquishment of dower

Where the certificate of the acknowledgment by a wife of execution of a mortgage of land and chattels merely recites that she acknowledges the relinquishment of her right of dower in the land, such acknowledgment is insufficient to entitle the mortgage, as to the personality, to be filed for record.—Carle v. Statement of venue. While it has been required that the venue be stated in the certificate,⁶⁹ such a statement has been held unnecessary in at least one jurisdiction.⁷⁰

(b) Signature and Seal of Officer

The certificate should be signed by the officer taking the acknowledgment, and sealed.

The certificate of acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage should be signed by the officer taking the acknowledgment⁷¹ and sealed with the official seal.⁷²

First Nat. Bank, supra.

(3) But a certificate reading, "On this 27th day of March A. D., 1883, personally appeared before me —, known to me, who acknowledged that he executed the foregoing instrument freely and voluntarily, and for the uses and purposes therein set forth," is invalid for failure to set forth who came before the notary.—Lenehan v. Judicial notice of location of town

Where the caption of the acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage omits the name of the county, but the officer signs himself as justice of the peace for a certain incorporated town, it is a valid acknowledgment, since the court will take judicial notice of the county in which the town is located, and that the officer is a justice in that county.—Gilbert v. National Cash-Register Co., 52 N.E. 22, 176 Ill. 288.

Acknowledger shown to be resident
Under a statute providing that, when acknowledgment is made by a resident, the justice shall certify that the instrument was "entered" by him, it will be presumed, where such certificate is made, that the person acknowledging the instrument was a resident.—Gilbert v. § 83. Affixing Revenue Stamp

§ 84. Affidavit Accompanying Instrument

- a. Necessity
- b. Sufficiency

a. Necessity

- (1) In general
- (2) Effect of notice or knowledge of mortgage

(1) In General

Under governing statutes, which are strictly construed, the annexation of an affidavit as to the good faith of, or consideration for, a chattel mortgage is, with some qualifications, essential to validity as against creditors and subsequent purchasers, but not as between the parties. The want of, or a defect in, an affidavit is cured by the mortgagee's taking possession of the property before third parties' rights intervene.

Where a statute providing all that is required to complete the execution of a chattel mortgage makes no reference to an affidavit of good faith, execution is complete, and the mortgage is entitled to recordation, without such affidavit.⁸⁵ Under particular governing statutes, however, the annexation of an affidavit as to the good faith of, or the consideration for, the mortgage, or both is requisite to its registration or recordation,⁸⁶ and, subject to qualifications later appearing, to its validity as to subsequent purchasers for value and in good faith,⁸⁷ a subsequent mortgagee in good faith,⁸⁸ and creditors of the mortgagor.⁸⁹ As between the parties,⁹⁰ however, and as against third persons in privity with the parties to the transaction leading to mortgage,⁹¹ or having no rights against the mortgagor,⁹² no affidavit is necessary; and no affidavit describing the debt for which the mortgage was given is necessary to a common-law mortgage.⁹³

Object of statute

(1) "With the object of preventing fraud in the pledging of chattels by mortgage and as a means of authenticating and verifying the contents of the mortgage, many states provide by statute that a chattel mortgage to be valid shall be accompanied by an affidavit made by one of the parties, either showing that the mortgage is made without intent to hinder and defraud creditors or disclosing the consideration, and indicating as nearly as possible the amount due and to grow due. The provisions, as well as the interpretation of such statutes, depend in different jurisdictions very largely upon the light in which chattel mortgages are regarded as a security."—In re Novelty Web Co., N.J., 236 F. 501, 503, 149 C.C.A. 553, affirming, D.C., 228 F. 1007.

(2) "The legislative purpose in the enactment . . . was to compel the mortgagee to commit himself to a statement or disclosure of his debt or claim, under oath, when he made his mortgage a matter of record, suf-

The statutes above referred to are held to require strict construction, as being in derogation of the common law.⁹⁴ They apply to instruments which, although in some other form or called by some other name, are, in fact chattel mortgages,⁹⁵ but not, of course, to instruments not such in fact.⁹⁶

Cases passing on the sufficiency of the accompanying affidavit, as dealt with in subdivision a of this section, support by inference the proposition that an affidavit is necessary.

The omission of a proper affidavit is not remedied by a subsequent affidavit without again recording the instrument,⁹⁷ or by an affidavit of renewal stating the requisite facts, including the averment of good faith,⁹⁸ or by the fact that the mortgagor went before a notary public for the purpose and with the intent of performing every act required by law to make the instrument a valid mortgage.⁹⁹

Affirmation by the mortgagor may be sufficient if he has conscientious scruples against the taking of an oath.¹

Effect of mortgagee's taking possession. The want of,² or a defect in,³ an affidavit is cured where ficiently precise and specific to afford the creditors of the mortgagor, in case fraud was suspected, a fair opportunity to ascertain, by judicial investigation or otherwise, whether the mortgage was an honest security or a mere fraudulent cover."—*Bateman Bros. v. General creditor's remedy. A mortgagee seizing and selling a chattel under a mortgage void because the annexed affidavit fails to comply with the governing statute is liable to account to the mortgagor's general creditors for the proceeds of the sale.⁴ A general creditor of the mortgagor has been held unable to set aside such a deficient mortgage until he has himself acquired a specific interest in, or claim on, the particular property involved;⁵ but a different result has been reached under controlling statutory language.⁶

(1) Time of Execution

An affidavit may be effectual whether executed before or after the execution of the mortgage.

The execution of the affidavit before the mortgage does not render it ineffectual to support the mortgage when it is subsequently executed.¹⁷ Conversely, an affidavit executed and attached subsequently to the execution of a mortgage will render it valid, except as against intervening rights and claims.¹⁸

(2) Who May Make

Statutory provisions prescribing the persons who may make the required affidavit must be complied with.

Under the varying provisions of statutes, the affidavit may be required to be made by the mortgagee, his agent, or attorney,¹⁹ the holder of the mortgage, his agent, or attorney,²⁰ the mortgagor or some person for him having knowledge of the facts,²¹ or both the mortgagor and the mortgagee.²² In the construction of particular statutes, it has been held that a trustee may make the necessary affidavit,²³ that an affidavit by an agent²⁴ or an attorney in fact,²⁵ or by one selectman in behalf of a town,²⁶ may be sufficient, that one of several comortgagees has authority to make the affidavit as agent for the others,²⁷ and, with respect to a crop mortgage, that only the person recognized as the sole tenant, and no other occupant, need sign the affidavit.²⁸

In the case of a corporation, if no particular officer is designated in the statute as the person who shall execute the affidavit, it may be made by any one of its officers or agents;²⁹ but it must be made

Mistake in designation of affiant

Where the chattel mortgage on the property of a corporation was acknowledged by the secretary, an affidavit by the same individual, describing him as secretary, and stating that he was the individual mortgagor, and that it was made in good faith, was manifestly intended to be made on behalf of the corporation, and does not invalidate the mortgage.—First Nat. Bank v. Oppenheimer, 212 P. 164, 123 Wash. 290.

In New Jersey

(1) Under a statute requiring that the affidavit be made "by the holder of said mortgage, his agent, or attorney," it was held that, "when an affidavit is taken by a corporation through an attorney or agent, the fact of agency must be verified in the affidavit, and when taken by the

to appear in the affidavit that a representative of the corporation actually made an oath as to the facts.³⁰

A partner making the affidavit of good faith for the firm must identify himself as a member of the firm,³¹ or sign the firm name.³² Where partners act as individuals, each individual must sign the affidavit.³³

The spouse of the mortgagor need not join in the affidavit unless a necessary party to the mortgage.³⁴

A third person who is secured by a mortgage must have some one make an affidavit in his behalf as to the validity of his claim.³⁵

(3) Who May Take

It should sufficiently appear that the affidavit was taken by a competent officer.

It should sufficiently appear that the affidavit was taken by a competent officer.³⁶ An affidavit is not rendered invalid by the fact that the notary public before whom it was executed was affiant's attorney.³⁷

(4) Form and Contents

- (a) In general
- (b) Statement of consideration
- (c) Description of parties

(a) In General

Substantial compliance with statutes governing the form or contents of the affidavit is sufficient; the affidavit should be liberally construed, and technical skill in drawing not required, but a substantial or material falsity in the affidavit voids the mortgage. The affidavit and mortgage may be read together, at least if the former refers to the latter.

Ordinarily, where the affidavit contains the facts required by the statute, the form in which they are stated is immaterial.³⁸ Statutory requirements as to form or contents must be substantially, but need not be literally, complied with;³⁹ and the affidavit corporation per se by a duly qualified officer of the corporation his official capacity must appear either in the body of the affidavit or in the signature thereto."—Moore v. Preiss Trading Corporation, 184 A. 521, 522, 120 N.J.Eq. 214, affirming 182 A. 824, 119 N.J.Eq. 366.

(2) So, an affidavit by "Elias Preiss of Preiss Trading Corporation," signed "Elias Preiss," is insufficient for failure to show that affiant was an officer or agent of the corporation mortgagee.—Moore v. Preiss Trading Corporation, 184 A. 521, 120 N.J.Eq. 214, affirming 182 A. 824, 119 N.J.Eq. 366.

(3) So, also, an affidavit, reciting that the corporation mortgagee swore to its contents and signed by the corporation by its secretary, without showing that the secretary was the agent of the corporation, is defective. "In the Lessler case [infra (4)] the affidavit was made by the president. . . . Acts of a president or vice president of a mortgagee corporation are in legal contemplation the acts of the corporation. Those of a secretary or agent may or may not be."—Pincus v. U. S. Dyeing & Cleaning Works, 133 A. 66, 67, 99 N.J.Eq. 160.

(4) "An affidavit of consideration . . . made by the president of a corporation, the mortgagee, need not affirm that he is the agent (president); he is in contemplation of law the corporation. . . . The president's affidavit is in legal contemplation the affidavit of the bank, and not that of an agent or attorney."—Lessler v. Paterson Nat. Bank, 128 A. 800, 97 N.J.Eq. 396, affirmed 131 A. 923, 99 N.J.Eq. 428.

(5) Likewise, an affidavit taken by secretary and treasurer of corporate mortgagee is sufficient, where he is so described in the affidavit.—Locke Cotton Mills Co. v. Plasket, 183 A. 682, 119 N.J.Eq. 598.

(6) But an affidavit of mortgagor's vice president is not a sufficient compliance with such statute, in the absence of a showing that he executed such affidavit as the agent of the mortgagee.—Haines v. Keating, C.C.A.N.J., 296 F. 896, applying New Jersey statute.

should be liberally, not technically, construed.⁴⁰ Further, an affidavit cannot be impeached because drawn inartificially or without a high degree of technical skill,⁴¹ or because of mere surplusage.⁴² On the other hand, an insufficiency cannot be cured or explained by extrinsic evidence.⁴³

Statements in mortgage as aiding affidavit. Under a number of authorities, an insufficient affidavit cannot be aided by statements contained in the mortgage, unless reference is made to the body of the mortgage in the affidavit, in which case they may be read together;⁴⁴ but it has been held that where the bona fides of the transaction is not in question, slight circumstances will justify a reading of the affidavit and the mortgage as one,⁴⁵ and other cases declare without qualification that the affidavit and the recitals in the body of the mortgage should, or must, be read together to ascertain whether there has been a sufficient compliance with the terms of the statute.⁴⁶

Stolzenbach, N.J., 68 A. 1078, 16 L.R.A.N.S. 703, the statutory affidavit of consideration of a chattel mortgage had been construed by the courts below as "a statutory requirement of considerable technicality," but in that case that doctrine was squarely rejected, it being held that, in the absence of fraud, instruments so common in the course of commercial transactions by laymen as chattel mortgages should be sustained whenever there was an honest and substantial compliance with the statute.

False affidavit. Falsity in the affidavit generally, or any substantial or material deviation from the truth therein, voids the mortgage,⁴⁷ even though such deviation was not intentional or in bad faith;⁴⁸ and an affidavit false in part will not support a chattel mortgage even as to that part which it truthfully represents.⁴⁹ However, an affidavit is not objectionable if true as of the date of the recording of the mortgage,⁵⁰ or if the error is immaterial.⁵¹ technical. A statement of the consideration as consisting of advances may be sufficient.

Under governing statutory provisions, the affidavit annexed to the mortgage has been variously required to state substantially and truthfully⁵² that the consideration set forth in the mortgage is true and bona fide,⁵³ that the consideration is actual, adequate, and given in good faith,⁵⁴ or that the mortgage was made for the bona fide purpose of securing a debt or making indemnity, as the case may be,⁵⁵ or to conform substantially to the purpose of the mortgage and verify the truth, justice,

Statutes requiring that the affidavit itself contain a statement of the consideration,⁵⁷ or of the amount of the claim or liability,⁵⁸ must be complied with. While a substantial, as differing from a technical, statement of the consideration may be acceptable,⁵⁹ the affidavit must, either alone or read in connection with the mortgage,⁶⁰ truthfully and adequately set it forth.⁶¹ So, the mortgage will be void if the statement of consideration overstates⁶² or only partially states⁶³ the consideration, or conceals a bo-

Effect of allowing substantial compliance; mistake

(1) "The rule of substantial compliance in no way lessens the substantive requirements of the Chattel Mortgage Act; the final and controlling inquiry, in the light of all the facts, is whether the real consideration has been honestly and adequately set forth in the affidavit."—Bate-man Bros. v. Jones, 154 A. 4, 5, 109 N.J.Eq. 8.

(2) Requirements of statute are not lessened nor is its mandate weakened by rule of substantial compliance. The command of the statute is imperative that "unless the mortgage, when recorded, is accompanied by an affidavit which states fully and plainly (completely and truthfully) the consideration on which it is founded . . . the courts shall treat the mortgage as absolutely void as against the creditors of the mortgagor," irrespective of mistake, bad faith, and intention to defraud.

Dual consideration

Where a chattel mortgage secured the payment of a note and the performance of a contract and was not to become effective until the contract was executed, an affidavit which mentioned only the note as a consideration was defective.—Bolschweiler v. Packer House Hotel Co., 91 A. 1027, 83 N.J.Eq. 459.

nus,⁶⁴ or untruthfully alleges the relation of creditor and debtor between the mortgagor and mortgagee,⁶⁵ or falsely asserts that the consideration came from affiant,⁶⁶ or that money has been advanced and is due,⁶⁷ or is so indefinite as to wholly fail to disclose the nature or verify the truth of the consideration;⁶⁸ but an immaterial error will not void the mortgage.⁶⁹ An affidavit that a cash loan was made on the date a check was delivered is not false.⁷⁰

An affidavit has been held sufficiently true if the consideration stated was paid after the affidavit was made, but before the mortgage was recorded,⁷¹ and it has been declared that it is not necessary for the consideration to be entirely paid prior to or at the time the affidavit is made, if it is made in good faith;⁷² but under other authority an affidavit alleging payment of a certain sum of money is false, and the mortgage void against creditors, where no money was paid on the date of execution of the mortgage.⁷³

Advances. An affidavit may be sufficient which states the consideration to be a sum certain agreed to be advanced by the mortgagee,⁷⁴ or approximately estimates, instead of exactly stating, the amount of advances made,⁷⁵ or states the total amount of several advances made at different times,⁷⁶ or includes in the total indebtedness stated to be due an advance set forth as consideration but not stated to be due,⁷⁷ or states the total sum advanced to the mortgagors on their joint credit as partners, although intended partly for individual use.⁷⁸ is given as a substitute for a former one, it is not necessary that the affidavit state such fact;⁷⁹ it is sufficient if the affidavit describes the indebtedness of the old mortgage.⁸⁰

bb. Description of Consideration or Obligation

An affidavit annexed to a mortgage given to secure a debt, liability, or agreement, including liability as surety, should contain facts making clear the nature of the transaction. Insufficient averments as to consideration will not be aided by an inference that a loan was made.

According as the mortgage is given to secure a debt, liability, or agreement, the affidavit must be so varied as to verify the real transaction between the parties.⁸¹ Under governing statutory provisions, the affidavit should show how the debt or obligation arose,⁸² how the relation of debtor and creditor was created between the mortgagee and the mortgagee,⁸³ whose obligation is secured and to whom it accrues,⁸⁴ the nature of any services to be performed,⁸⁵ the amount of the indebtedness⁸⁶ and as nearly as possible, the amount due and to grow due in respect thereof.⁸⁷

Proceeds of notes minus discounts

Failure to state that only the proceeds of notes after payment of discounts were paid to the mortgagor will not render an affidavit false where the consideration is stated to be a loan of the face amount of the notes, and the transaction is set forth in detail, since a discount paid for, and on behalf of, the mortgagor forms part of the loan, and the aggregate makes up the total sworn to.—Flockhart Foundry Co. v. Meaning of "due"

It has been repeatedly held that the meaning of the word "due" is not necessarily "owing and payable," and that "it is often used to signify merely the present existence of a debt to be paid hereafter."—Abeles v. Guelick, 137 A. 853, 855, 101 N.

"Adjusted interest"

An affidavit containing a statement that "adjusted interest" shall be paid may accurately set forth the amount due and to grow due on the mortgage, since the presumption exists that interest in excess of the lawful rate is not intended.—McDonald v. Renewal note

"The affidavit is defective in respect of the averment that the consideration is the acceptance of . . . the renewal note. It merely shows a state of facts, not a consideration. It discloses that the bank held the evidence of indebtedness, the notes, for which the renewal was given, in part, but it fails to state how the indebtedness arose, what the consideration was upon which the notes were given, a loan of money, the value of work done, the price of things sold, or the like."—Wisner Mfg. a statement merely setting forth notes or checks,⁹² is insufficient, since such an averment or statement fails to set forth the consideration for the mortgage⁹³ or the instrument secured,⁹⁴ and a loan will not be inferred.⁹⁵

Liability as surety. An affidavit to a mortgage securing a liability as surety should state that fact, and what the liability is,⁹⁶ and that the mortgage was taken in good faith;⁹⁷ a statement that the claim on which the mortgagee is surety is just and unpaid is insufficient.⁹⁸

Where the mortgagee is a surety on notes, the affidavit should state the name of the payee or holder, the amount and date of each note, and the fact that they are still outstanding.⁹⁹ Where the liability secured by the mortgage is an accommodation liability, that it is partly as maker and partly as indorser, instead of solely as indorser, as stated in the affidavit, does not render false an otherwise truthful statement of the consideration.¹ A mortgagee's affidavit showing the consideration to be his liability as an accommodation indorser has not been required to state the consideration for the indorsed notes;² but there is authority to the contrary.³

(c) Description of Parties

The affidavit should describe the parties by giving their names.

The affidavit should describe the parties by giving their names;⁴ but in particular circumstances an affidavit has been held to comply substantially with the statute, notwithstanding erroneous recitals as to the identity of the parties.⁵

Trustee. One to whom a mortgage is given as a trustee need not, in his sworn statement of claim, name the beneficiaries of his trust or specify the interest of each beneficiary therein.⁶

(5) Signature of Affiant

By the weight of authority, the affiant's signature is unnecessary in the absence of statute or court rule requiring it.

In a few jurisdictions it is held that the affidavit must bear the signature of affiant in order to make it valid;⁷ but according to the decided weight of authority, the signature of affiant is unnecessary, in the absence of a rule of court or a statute requiring it.⁸

encumbrancers in good faith and for value;¹⁰ and such absence cannot be supplied by oral evidence that affiant was sworn.¹¹

The jurat should indicate the person who took the oath to the affidavit¹² and the officer before whom it was taken.¹³ The signature or seal of an officer authorized to administer oaths has been held essential to the jurat,¹⁴ and a seal has been declared insufficient in the absence of a signature,¹⁵ but other authority holds a seal unnecessary.¹⁶ The notary need not specify his official capacity,¹⁷ at least where it appears in the imprint of his seal,¹⁸ and his failure to specify his place of residence is not fatal where he gives it in certifying to the acknowledgment;¹⁹ nor is the mortgage invalidated by the omission of the words "So help us God" at the end of the affidavit.²⁰ The fact that the date of the jurat is not that on which the affidavit was made does not affect the validity of the affidavit.²¹

An imperfection in the jurat has been held not to render the mortgage ineffectual as notice when it is acknowledged as deeds of conveyances of realty are required to be.²²

§ 85. Confirmation or Ratification of Defective Instrument

Except where the rights of third persons intervene, a subsequent acceptance or ratification will relate back and validate a mortgage which was not delivered or assented to.

Where a mortgage is not delivered or assented to, a subsequent acceptance or a ratification will relate back and validate it as to persons whose rights subsequently accrued,²³ but a subsequent assent does not validate the mortgage as against parties acquiring interests in the mortgaged property prior to such assent.²⁴ Where a creditor once refuses to accept a mortgage, he cannot afterward accept it without the debtor's consent.²⁵ A mortgage given for corrective purposes will not relate back to the aid of prior defective mortgages where the corrective mortgage is itself void.²⁶

§ 86. Delivery

Particular matters in regard to delivery will be discussed in detail in the sections immediately following.

§ 87. — Necessity

Delivery of a mortgage to the mortgagee or his agent is essential to its validity.

An actual or constructive delivery of a mortgage to the mortgagee or to his duly authorized agent is essential to its validity.²⁷ Although there may be no valid delivery of a mortgage at the time of its execution, however, a subsequent delivery will avail against those who have not in the meantime acquired rights to the property or an interest in it.²⁸ An erasure made before delivery will not invalidate the mortgage.²⁹

§ 88. — Sufficiency and Effect

No particular form of delivery is required, as long as it appears that the mortgagor parted with the control of the instrument with the intention that it should become operative. A return of the instrument to the mortgagor will not avoid a valid delivery.

No definite or specific formality is required by law for a delivery,³⁰ it being largely a matter of intention, as disclosed by all the surrounding circumstances.³¹ Anything which clearly manifests the intent of the parties that the instrument shall presently become effective, and that the maker loses all control over it, and that, by it, the person to whom it is made becomes possessed of the estate, constitutes a sufficient delivery.³² Manual transfer of the document from the hands of the mortgagor to the hands of the mortgagee is not essential.³³ It may be delivered by words without acts, or by acts without words, or by both combined.³⁴

Delivery should be made by the mortgagor or by some one acting under his directions.³⁵ Delivery may be made to the mortgagee himself³⁶ or to some one authorized to receive the document for him,³⁷ or under certain circumstances to a stranger for the use and benefit of the mortgagee without the latter's authority, as in the case of a mortgagee under legal disability.³⁸ Delivery to one of several mortgagees named in an instrument renders it effective as to all and cannot be restrained by the use of words on the part of the mortgagor so as to take effect as to one only.³⁹

Recording as delivery. Recording a mortgage at the instance of the mortgagor and without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee does not amount to a delivery to him.⁴⁰ Where, however, a mortgage is executed in pursuance of a previous agreement to give security, and the recording is in accordance with the mortgagor's direction or with the understanding of the parties, the registration of the instrument constitutes a sufficient delivery.⁴¹ The execution of a mortgage in payment of, or as security for the payment of, a bona fide indebtedness, and its filing for record is, as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, a sufficient delivery, although the mortgagee has no knowledge of the transaction, but, if the rights of the other parties intervene between the filing of such instrument and the acceptance by the mortgagee, the filing of the mortgage is not a sufficient delivery as against such parties.⁴² If the instrument is not actually recorded, however, a mere agreement on the part of the mortgagor to file the mortgage will not avail the mortgagee unless it is carried out.⁴³

Where a mortgagee ratifies the act of the mortgagor in sending for record, this constitutes the registration a sufficient delivery as effectively as a previous agreement for the giving of the mortgage would have done.⁴⁴

Effect of delivery. After delivery has once been made a return of the instrument to the mortgagor will not avoid it.⁴⁵

§ 89. — Delivery of Copy to Mortgagor

Under some statutes the mortgagee must give the mortgagor a copy of the mortgage, and the mortgagor must give a receipt therefor which must be attached to the mortgage.

To enable the mortgagor to detect any changes or alterations in the original instrument, by statute the mortgagee may be required to deliver to the mortgagor a full and complete copy of the mortgage,⁴⁶ and the mortgagor may be required to surrender to the mortgagee a receipt, which is to be attached to the original mortgage, showing that the mortgagee has surrendered to him a copy of such mortgage.⁴⁷ Where a correct copy of the mortgage is surrendered to the mortgagor,⁴⁸ unless the statute expressly renders the mortgage void,⁴⁹ the mortgage is valid as between the parties, however, even though the mortgagee is not given such a receipt.⁵⁰ In the absence of a statutory provision that the mortgage shall be void if the mortgagor does not receive a copy thereof, where the mortgagor signed a receipt that he received a copy of the mortgage, that he did not in fact receive a copy does not invalidate the mortgage.⁵¹

Under some statutes the borrower must be given a memorandum or notice of the contents of the note and mortgage.⁵²

Acceptance of the mortgage by the mortgagor is essential to its validity.

Acceptance on the part of the mortgagee is essential to make a mortgage a valid instrument.⁵³ The failure, however, of some of several creditors included in the mortgage to accept it does not invalidate it or render it any the less forceful in favor of those who do accept it.⁵⁴ It has been held that a mortgage in the form of a deed of trust must be accepted by the beneficiaries named therein;⁵⁵ acceptance by the trustee is insufficient⁵⁶ unless authorized by the beneficiaries.⁵⁷ The acceptance, by the creditor, however, is sufficient when communicated to the trustee without notifying the mortgagor.⁵⁸

It is a sufficient acceptance of a mortgage if a creditor to whom it is executed is notified of its execution and does nothing which shows an intention to reject it,⁵⁹ but does some act which shows his acquiescence thereto,⁶⁰ or ratifies some act of an unauthorized agent in assuming to recognize or pro-

Incorporation in instrument

(1) Where the receipt is incorporated in the body of the mortgage, and the mortgagor signs but once, and in the usual place at the end of the body of the instrument, this is not a substantial compliance with the statute and the filing of such an instrument is not notice to anyone.—Stoffel v. Sullivan, 193 N.W. 45, 45 N.D. 695.

(2) Where, however, the receipt was at the end of the instrument, and the mortgagor signed it twice, it was a sufficient receipt.—Baird v. Wilton Elevator Co., 237 N.W. 695, 61 N.D. 165.

Mortgages included

Such a statute applies only to mortgages proper, such as are commonly used and recognized as chattel mortgages, intended to secure a debt or the performance of an act. Farm leases are not within the statute.—Dorman v. Crooks State Bank, 225 N.W. 661, 55 S.D. 209, 64 A.L.R. 614.

Place of receipt

The mere fact that such receipt appears above the acknowledgment and affidavit does not render the mortgage insufficient, as the receipt cannot be construed only as a receipt of a copy of so much of the instrument as precedes it in point of arrangement.—Swords v. Occident Elevator Co., 232 P. 189, 72 Mont. 189.

cure the mortgage.⁶¹ Acceptance must be with full knowledge of the facts.⁶²

The parties may by previous agreement constitute an agent to accept the mortgage.⁶³ Among such agents may be the recorder⁶⁴ or the mortgagor himself.⁶⁵ Whether or not an agent has been appointed must be determined by the jury.⁶⁶

In a proper case delivery and acceptance of a chattel mortgage may be presumed.

While acceptance will be presumed when the mortgage was executed in pursuance of a previous agreement,⁶⁷ such an inference cannot be drawn from the beneficial character of the instrument to the detriment of intervening creditors.⁶⁸ The execution, acknowledgment, and recording of a chattel mortgage, however, which is beneficial to the mortgagee has been held to raise a presumption of acceptance,⁶⁹ and, where the mortgage is in the form of a deed of trust, the assent of a cestui que trust is presumed, until renouncement, if the trust be for his benefit.⁷⁰

A delivery will be presumed when the note and the mortgage are found in the possession of the mortgagee.⁷¹ A presumption of delivery arises from the fact that a mortgage is on record,⁷² and delivery may be inferred from the acts of the mortgagee assenting to and adopting a recorded mortgage.⁷³ The presumption of delivery and acceptance, however, is not a conclusive one, but is prima facie only. It may be shown, if such be the fact, that the mortgagee never accepted the instrument but rejected the same when apprised of its existence.⁷⁴

Time of delivery. In the absence of evidence giving rise to another inference,⁷⁵ the law presumes that a mortgage is delivered on the day of its date.⁷⁶

Proof of document. If the subscribing witness to a mortgage, because of either physical or legal obstacles, cannot be produced, the mortgage may be proved by other evidence.⁷⁷

§ 92. Questions of Law and Fact

On conflicting evidence, questions as to the execution and delivery of a mortgage are for the determination of the jury.

executed by the mortgagor,⁷⁹ whether there was a proper attestation,⁸⁰ whether a mortgagor who misspelled his name in his signature to the mortgage intended to be bound thereby,⁸¹ and whether a mortgage was delivered,⁸² are questions of fact for the jury.

VI. VALIDITY OF ASSENT AND LEGALITY

§ 93. Capacity and Assent of Parties in General

Mutual assent to the contract is essential to the validity of a chattel mortgage.

There must be a meeting of minds in the formation of a chattel mortgage as in any other contract.⁸³ The mortgagor must have sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the transaction,⁸⁴ and voluntary drunkenness on the part of the mortgagor has been held to render the mortgage voidable.⁸⁵

The capacity of particular classes of persons to become parties to a chattel mortgage is considered in the specific titles discussing the rights and liabilities of such persons. The necessity of title and ownership in the mortgagor has already been considered in § 23.

§ 94. Mistake

A chattel mortgage resulting from a mutual mistake as to material matters is unenforceable.

Since, as already pointed out in the preceding section, mutual assent of the parties is essential to a chattel mortgage, a chattel mortgage resulting from a mutual mistake of the parties as to material matters is unenforceable.⁸⁶ In the absence of fraud, however, a mistake of one of the parties due to the fact that he did not read the instrument before executing it is insufficient to invalidate it.⁸⁷

§ 95. Fraud, Duress, or Undue Influence

A chattel mortgage procured by fraud or duress is voidable.

In accordance with the general rule of contracts, where the execution of a chattel mortgage is procured by fraud or false representations, the mortgage is voidable,⁸⁸ at least where the defense of

Illiterate mortgagor

Failure to disclose the contents of the instrument to an illiterate mortgagor may constitute such fraud as would relieve him of liability thereunder.—Southern Fertilizer & Chemical Co. v. Carter, 94 S.E. 310, 21 Ga. App. 282—11 C.J. p 490 note 72 [a] (2).

A junior mortgagee cannot complain of the annulling of a transaction voidable because of the mortgagor's fraud, where he has no right to require that the mortgagor's fraud be given effect so as to afford him priority.—Mack International Motor Truck Corporation v. Jefferson Trust & Savings Bank, C.C.A.La., 25 F.2d 251.

Westlake Garage Co.*, 196 P. 586, 115 Wash. 45.

(2) Mortgage without consideration to protect mortgagor from creditors, as to mortgagor.—Dennis v. Rotter, 183 N.E. 188, 43 Ohio App. 330.

(3) Where tenant of a rooming house gave a chattel mortgage to a roomer, which was placed on record several days prior to the tenant's subsequent mortgage to landlord and the next day thereafter turned possession of the house over to the roomer, that the roomer took posses-

fraud is asserted within a reasonable time after the discovery thereof,⁸⁹ irrespective of the mortgagor's certificate or declaration that the mortgage is valid.⁹⁰ Also, where a sale is induced by fraud, a chattel mortgage for the purchase price executed as a part of the same transaction is voidable.⁹¹

In accordance with the general rule as to alterations of instruments, as discussed in Alteration of Instruments § 5, an intentional and fraudulent insertion of additional property in a chattel mortgage by the mortgagee renders the instrument void.⁹²

Duress. Under the rules applicable to contracts generally, a chattel mortgage may be voidable because executed under influence of duress of person⁹³ or property,⁹⁴ and, in some jurisdictions, because of any compulsion such as to deprive the mortgagor of the exercise of his free will.⁹⁵ Although a mortgage executed under threats of arrest or prosecution is void as against public policy,⁹⁶ a mere threat to institute legal proceedings, in case security is not given, will not constitute duress invalidating a chattel mortgage given because of such threat.⁹⁷

Duress, to invalidate the mortgage, must be shown to have continued up to the time of its execution,⁹⁸ and is waived unless asserted within a reasonable time after the removal thereof.⁹⁹

§ 96. Illegality

A mortgage given for a purpose in violation of public policy or violating mandatory statutory requirements is void.

A mortgage given for a purpose violative of public policy,¹ or failing to comply with mandatory statutes as to form and contents,² is void. Particular mortgages have been held not to be invalid as contrary to statute in respect of the maturity of the debt secured,³ the right of the mortgagee to take sion as tenant's agent, and then later, when convinced that tenant was not going to repay him his money or return, took possession under his mortgage.—Menefee v. Scally, Mo. App., 247 S.W. 259.

Threat of arrest

(1) Where a sheriff, after levying an attachment on household goods late at night, threatened to remove such goods and to arrest the mortgagor if he interfered, a chattel mortgage executed under such threats was invalid.—Beyerle v. A. Fochtman Department Store, supra.

(2) However, where there was no threat of arrest, but merely a statement that the mortgagor was liable to fine and imprisonment, the evidence was insufficient to overturn the mortgage for duress.—Reichle v. Bentele, 70 S.W. 919, 97 Mo.App. 52.

(2) However, a note and chattel mortgage given to avoid lawful levy of execution on property not shown to be exempt and to avoid annoyance and humiliation resulting therefrom are valid and enforceable.—Koeberle v. Coit, 189 P. 727, 46 Cal.App. 641.

Fraud on federal land bank

The policy of the government, in making loans through the federal land bank, is to assist debtors unable to meet their obligations by securing the creditor's agreement to scale down the indebtedness. Consequently, where the creditor agreed to scale down the indebtedness and release his security, a mortgage taken to secure the amount the creditor agreed to relinquish is void as against public policy.—Jones v. McFarland, Miss., 173 So. 296.

Mortgage executed contemporaneously with sale is not invalid, as there is no reason why a seller cannot execute a bill of sale for chattels and take back a mortgage to secure the purchase price.—Voigt v. Ludlow Typograph Co., Ind., 12 N. E.2d 499.

2. Ala.—Rice v. Garnett, 84 So. 557, 17 Ala.App. 239, certiorari denied Ex parte Garnett, 85 So. 921, 204 Ala. 698.

Mortgagee held in money lending business so as to render mortgage void for failure to comply with statute.—Rice v. Garnett, supra.

3. Dependent on renewal affidavits

A statute, providing that the maturity of the debt secured by the mortgage shall not exceed three years from the filing of the mortgage for record, unless within ninety days after the expiration of the three years the mortgagor shall file a renewal affidavit, does not render a mortgage void ab initio because it secures an indebtedness due after the expiration of three years from possession should he deem his security insecure,⁴ or the manner of foreclosure on default.⁵

§ 97. Partial Invalidity

Invalidity of a severable part does not invalidate the entire mortgage.

An unlawful severable provision in an otherwise valid mortgage invalidates only that particular part of the mortgage which contains the unlawful provision, and does not render the mortgage void in its entirety.⁶ Accordingly, in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁷ a mortgage may be good to transfer title to a portion of the property described in it, although it is void as to other portions which it assumes to transfer,⁸ as where some of the property assumed to be covered by a mortgage cannot legally be made the subject thereof.⁹ A provision in a mortgage, however, containing a valid clause inseparably connected with an invalid clause is void in its entirety.¹⁰

Consideration. A mortgage given to secure notes, the consideration of which is in part unlawful, as forbidden by statute or by the common law, is void in its entirety.¹¹ However, there are cases holding that, where a mortgage is given to secure two separate debts, only one of which is unlawful, the mortgage may be enforced to the extent of the valid indebtedness.¹² Also, where two notes secured by mortgage are given for a consideration which is in part unlawful, and the unlawful portion of the consideration is less than either of the notes, although there is authority to the contrary,¹³ it has been held that the holder may apply all the unlawful consideration to one of the notes and recover on the other.¹⁴

§ 98. Persons Who May Assert Invalidity

A third person cannot attack the validity of a mortgage unless he is a subsequent mortgagee, a purchaser from the mortgagor, or an attaching creditor. Fraud in procurement and duress are defenses personal to the mortgagor.

A third person cannot impeach the validity of a mortgage,¹⁵ unless he is a subsequent mortgagee,¹⁶ a subsequent purchaser from the mortgagor, see infra § 263, or a creditor who has laid hold of the property by an appropriate legal proceeding.¹⁷

Personal defenses. The right to attack the mortgage on the ground that it was procured by false representations is personal to the mortgagor.¹⁸ Likewise, the defense of duress is personal to the mortgagor, and cannot be raised by his creditors for the purpose of having the mortgage set aside.¹⁹

§ 99. Estoppel or Waiver as to Defects or Objections

A person may by his conduct waive, or be estopped to assert, the invalidity of a mortgage.

the time the mortgage is filed for record, its validity after the three years depending on the filing of a renewal affidavit in conformity with the act.—Busch v. Tatar, 271 Ill.App. 8.

4. Not illegal charge

A mere provision in a small loan mortgage, authorizing the lender to take possession of the mortgaged chattel should he deem his security insufficient or insecure, is not of itself an illegal charge within the meaning of statutes prohibiting excessive charges for such loans.—Mason v. City Finance Co., 151 So. 521, 113 Fla. 73.

5. Provision held valid

Provision that chattel mortgage might be foreclosed in manner provided by law for foreclosure where manner of foreclosure was not specified in mortgage and consideration does not exceed $500, did not render mortgage for greater sum invalid.—First Nat. Bank v. Frazier, 22 P.2d 325, 143 Or. 662.

6. Power of attorney

A power of attorney contained in a mortgage in violation of a statute does not invalidate the mortgage itself, provided it is otherwise valid, but merely renders the particular provision containing the power of attorney invalid.—Mason v. City Finance Co., 151 So. 521, 113 Fla. 73.

The mortgagor²⁰ or mortgagee²¹ may be estopped by his conduct to assert the invalidity of the mortgage. However, where a statute prescribing the essentials of a mortgage is enacted for the protection of the public, the mortgagor cannot, by estoppel, be prevented from asserting the invalidity of his mortgage, in that it fails to comply with the statute.²² One who has assumed the mortgage debt as a portion of the purchase price of chattels cannot assert informalities in the execution of the mortgage in order to relieve himself from liability to perform his agreement.²³

Waiver. It has been held that the mortgagor²⁴ or the creditors of the mortgagor²⁵ may waive the invalidity of the mortgage, as where the mortgagor renews the indebtedness for which the mortgage is security.²⁶

§ 101. Rescission

As a general rule, a party desiring to rescind a mortgage must place the other party in statu quo.

A party desiring to rescind a mortgage must, as a general rule, place the other party in statu quo;²⁷ but the necessity for surrendering the mortgage instrument to the mortgagor, as a condition to rescission, may be waived by the mortgagor.²⁸ The mortgagee must rescind in toto; he cannot affirm that part of the contract which is in his favor, and rescind the rest.²⁹

Although one claiming under a mortgage has the original burden of showing its validity, a mortgage in the hands of the mortgagee is presumptively valid, and the person asserting its invalidity has the burden of proof thereof by clear and convincing evidence.

One claiming under a mortgage, or basing an action thereon, has the original burden of showing every fact on which its validity depends.³⁰ There is a presumption, however, that a mortgage in the hands of the mortgagee is valid,³¹ and a mortgage duly executed, acknowledged, and filed is presumed to express the terms and purpose of the instrument in its true light.³² Consequently, the burden of proving the invalidity of a mortgage rests on the person who asserts it.³³ A mortgage which has been foreclosed must be presumed to have been valid.³⁴

Admissibility. As bearing on the question of fraud in securing the execution of a mortgage, evidence of the circumstances surrounding the transaction is admissible;³⁵ and, where duress is alleged,

Character of property as personality

By giving a mortgage on personal property annexed to a freehold, the mortgagor estops himself to deny its character as personality.—Widick v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 49 P.2d 132, 173 Okl. 325, 104 A.L.R. 228—11 C.J. p 445 note 87, p 491 note 2 [a] (2).

Inability to discover fraud

In replevin to recover personality given as security for payment of note, defendant was not estopped to deny that note and mortgage were given without consideration where plaintiff was vice president of bank with which defendant dealt and defendant was unable by exercise of ordinary diligence of reasonable person of his ability to have discovered fraud practiced on him.—Fipps v. Stidham, 50 P.2d 680, 174 Okl. 473.

proceeds of a second mortgage are insufficient to estop him to assert the invalidity of the second mortgage.—Fife v. Ohio Inv. Co., 100 N. E. 392, 52 Ind.App. 108.

the facts leading up to the transaction are admissible.³⁶ Evidence as to fraud must, however, be relevant to the issues presented.³⁷

Weight and sufficiency. The usual rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil proceedings generally apply.³⁸

The proof must be clear and convincing to show a mutual mistake in the description of the property conveyed by a mortgage,³⁹ or in the debt secured;⁴⁰ and a like degree of proof is required to establish fraud or duress.⁴¹

§ 103. Questions of Law and Fact

The validity of a mortgage, where resort to extrinsic evidence is unnecessary, is a question for the court; but, on conflicting evidence, it is a question of fact for the jury.

Generally, where resort to extrinsic facts is unnecessary, the validity of a mortgage is a question of law for the court.⁴² On conflicting evidence, whether the execution of a chattel mortgage has been procured by fraud,⁴³ duress,⁴⁴ or misrepresentation⁴⁵ is a question of fact for the determination of the jury.

A. IN GENERAL

§ 104. General Rules of Construction

In construing chattel mortgages the general rules as to the construction of contracts apply, the object being to uphold the mortgage and to give effect to the intention of the parties.

Chattel mortgages are governed by the rules of construction applicable to contracts generally.⁴⁶ Accordingly, the primary object in construing a chattel mortgage must be to ascertain the intention of the parties,⁴⁷ and, where such intention is clear and unambiguous, no rule of construction can defeat it,⁴⁸ since it is the duty of the court to enforce the mortgage as made, not to make a new mortgage.⁴⁹ The intention of the parties is to be gathered from the language employed by them,⁵⁰ and, unless there is ambiguity in such language, it is not permissible to look beyond the face of the mortgage.⁵¹ Matters suggested by the language of the mortgage, however, although ascertained by outside inquiries, are legally within its terms.⁵² The mortgage must be considered as a whole⁵³ and, unless entirely unavoidable,⁵⁴ every clause and provision of it must be given effect,⁵⁵ although immaterial and unassisting language may be ignored whenever necessary to a proper construction of the mortgage.⁵⁶ Where the meaning of the mortgage is not clear, it will be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances,⁵⁷ such as the situation and conduct of the parties⁵⁸ and the subject matter and nature and purpose of the mortgage.⁵⁹

The force and validity of mortgages and the transfer of title are, except as modified by statute, to be tested by the common law touching sales of personal property.—Atlantic Transp. Co. v. Alexander Shipping Co., 157 N.E. 725, 261 Mass. 1.

Where the good faith of the transaction surrounding the execution of a mortgage is not questioned, it is the aim of the courts to preserve and not to destroy the mortgage.⁶⁰ If a chattel mortgage is ambiguous and susceptible of different constructions, one of which would give an unreasonable and unjust effect to it, any other construction which is reasonable and consistent with its purpose and the meaning of its provisions will be adopted;⁶¹ and it should be strictly construed against the mortgagee,⁶² as it is usually made most favorably to him, because of his position to dictate terms on account of the necessities of the mortgagor.⁶³

Construing instruments together. Where there are two instruments which are parts of the same transaction, they must be construed together in order to determine the nature of the contract,⁶⁴ even though the mortgage bears a later date than the other instrument, at least where the evidence discloses an intention to make it a part of the same transaction.⁶⁵ Where, however, the mortgagor executes a subsequent instrument to which the mortgagee is not a party it will not be presumed that it was the mortgagor's intention to limit or change his liability to the mortgagee.⁶⁶

Recitals. A distinct recital of a particular fact in a chattel mortgage is to be taken as at least prima facie evidence of such fact.⁶⁸

The statutory provisions governing a chattel mortgage constitute a part of the mortgage and bind the parties;⁶⁹ and such provisions extend, not only to every instrument which is by its terms a mortgage, but also to every conveyance which is intended to operate as such.⁷⁰

B. PARTIES AND DEBTS OR LIABILITIES SECURED

§ 107. Parties Secured

Generally, the intention of the mortgagor, as gathered from the mortgage determines what parties are secured thereby.

The question as to what parties are secured by the mortgage generally depends on the intention of the mortgagor as gathered from the language of

The admissibility of parol or extrinsic evidence to contradict or vary the terms of a mortgage is considered in the C.J.S. title Evidence §§ 922-923, also 22 C.J. p 1133 note 98-p 1135 note 18.

§ 106. Questions of Law and Fact

Unless resort must be had to extrinsic evidence to determine the intention of the parties, the construction to be given a chattel mortgage is a question of law.

The construction to be given a chattel mortgage is, when determined by facts apparent on its face, a question of law,⁷³ as, for example, questions as to property⁷⁴ or debt covered.⁷⁵ Where, however, it is necessary to resort to extrinsic evidence to ascertain the intention of the parties, the intention, as established by such evidence, may become a question of fact.⁷⁶

Negotiations as to property covered by mortgage

Where the evidence showed that before a chattel mortgage was executed there was correspondence between the parties with reference to the pledging of the earnings of the mortgaged property in payment of the principal and interest of the mortgage, but the mortgage made no provision for such payment, the mortgage superseded all negotiations leading to its execution, and therefore the earnings were not pledged to the payment of the mortgage.—*Illinois Refining Co. v. Mortgage in trust for creditors

Where a chattel mortgage was executed in favor of trustees for the benefit of creditors of the mortgagor, the creditors could properly be regarded as beneficiaries of the trust, although they were not named as parties in either the mortgage or trust instrument.—In re Pilot Radio & Tube Corporation, D.C.Mass., 5 F. lien to after-acquired goods, and a new mortgage is executed on after-acquired goods to one of the mortgagees to secure a separate debt, it inures as additional security to the original mortgage.⁸⁰ A mortgage given to secure the performance of a contract inures to the benefit of all persons interested in the contract.⁸¹

§ 108. Debt or Liability Secured

A mortgage is security only for such demands or indebtednesses as are within the contemplation of the parties at the time of its execution.

It is a well recognized rule of construction that a mortgage is security only for such demands or indebtednesses as are in the contemplation of the parties at the time of its execution;⁸² but where, as is usually the case, a mortgage is given to secure the payment of money the language of the mortgage is ordinarily so construed as to enable it to cover all obligations from the mortgagor to the mortgagee which were intended to be secured.⁸³ While a round sum secured by a chattel mortgage may be shown to be made up of certain specific items of liability due the mortgagee from the mortgagor,⁸⁴ where the mortgage is security for all sums due the mortgagee, it is immaterial whether the balance due is considered as one debt or as several debts.⁸⁵ The fact that a definite sum is mentioned as the consideration for the execution of the mortgage does not limit the amount of the debt secured thereby.⁸⁶

If the mortgage fails to specify what portion of a debt it secures, it is presumed to have been given to secure the part that is due.⁸⁷ Any presumption that a chattel mortgage covers a particular debt is rebutted by the fact that such debt was included in a subsequent mortgage on other property.⁸⁸ Except as restrained by the parol evidence rule, aliunde proof may be received to identify the indebtedness or to show what is in fact secured by the mortgage.⁸⁹

§ 109. — Maturity of Debt

In the absence of any stipulation as to the time of payment, the mortgage must be paid within a reasonable time; but a mortgage securing an existing debt is due as soon as given.

When no time is specified in a mortgage for the performance of the obligation on which it is conditioned, the law will require it to be performed within a reasonable time;⁹⁰ but where the mortgage secures an existing debt and no time for payment is specified it is due as soon as given.⁹¹ In case of irreconcilable conflict between the mortgage and the note, as to the time when the note is payable the date of the note will govern.⁹² Where the last day of grace on the note secured by the mortgage is Saturday, there is no breach until the next Monday.⁹³

(1) The fact that a mortgage given to secure a specifically described indebtedness also contains a general expression that it is to secure all other indebtedness of the mortgagor to the mortgagee will not render it a security for a prior or contemporaneous indebtedness not within the contemplation of the parties at the time of the execution of the mortgage.

(2) Where a chattel mortgage covered advances made at the time of the execution of the mortgage, a clause extending it to any other debt to become due before payment did not cover rents payable in kind, the parties having treated the rent as a distinct demand from the mortgage. —Albertville Trading Co. v. § 110. — Future Advances or Indebtedness

Where such is the intention of the parties, a chattel mortgage will stand as security for future indebtedness of the mortgagor to the mortgagees.

A chattel mortgage will stand as security for a future indebtedness of the mortgagor to the mortgagee if that is the intention of the parties,⁹⁵ but, in order for it so to operate, there must be an unequivocal agreement to that effect.⁹⁶ Where the mortgage contains such an agreement, it will secure only those advances which were within the contemplation of the parties at the time the mortgage was executed;⁹⁷ but an express stipulation in the mortgage that future transactions shall be based on the same security is broad enough to cover every transaction by which the mortgagor becomes indebted to the mortgagee,⁹⁸ and such an instrument has been held to secure advances made after the maturity of the mortgage.⁹⁹ If, however, the time within which advances are to be made is limited by the terms of the mortgage, the instrument secures no advances made after expiration of that time.¹ A mortgage given to secure a note executed as a basis of future credit to the mortgagor, nothing being then due, and also to secure future indebtedness, will not secure debts incurred after the payment of the indebtedness contemplated at the time the mortgage was executed;² but a mortgage given to secure a present indebtedness and also future advances operates as security by way of a continuing guaranty for an indebtedness incurred after a date when there is a balance in favor of the mortgagor, if the latter fails to have the mortgage canceled.³

Amount and character of advances secured. A mortgage to secure future advances must, as to the advances which are secured, be construed in accordance with the general terms of the contract, the apparent intention of the parties and the general trade usage, if any.⁴ The sum specified in a mortgage se-

(4) A mortgage to secure "all amounts . . . expended by the mortgagees . . . for the maintenance or transportation of the said property or for any purpose connected therewith."—Shoemaker v. White-Dulaney Co., 230 P. 162, 131 Wash. 347, affirmed 232 P. 695, 131 Wash. 347, 132 Wash. 699.

Under statute providing that "a mortgage given to secure advances for the purpose of making and gathering crops, shall embrace and cover crops before the same are planted or growing of such mortgagor, when it is so stipulated therein, within the limit of the calendar year such crops may be planted," the mortgage need not be actually executed within the calendar year within which the crops are planted or growing, but the mortgage must be one securing advances for the purpose of making and gathering the crops only where such advances are made during the calendar year within which the crops may be planted. Accordingly, a crop mortgage executed on December 20, although reciting that it was to secure advances for making crop of present year, must be construed as securing advances for crop during following year.—J. curing future advances has been held to be the limit of the amount of advances which the instrument will secure,⁵ although as between the parties such a mortgage is valid for whatever advances may be made by the mortgagee and accepted by the mortgagor, if it appears that it was the intention of the parties thereto that such additional amount should be secured by the mortgage.⁶ Also, where the mortgage is to secure a stated amount "more or less" it is not limited to the amount stated.⁷ Where the mortgage is to secure advances of goods to a certain amount, and the price at which the goods are to be furnished is not stated, it will be implied that the price is to be what the goods are reasonably worth at the time and place of the sale.⁸

A mortgage providing that it shall secure in addition to the debt mentioned all other amounts which may thereafter become due will cover only debts of the general kind of those specifically secured,⁹ but an express provision that the mortgage shall secure future indebtedness of any kind will cover any character of debt that the mortgagor may owe the mortgagee during the existence of the mortgage.¹⁰

Advances at option of mortgagee. Although future advances are optional with the mortgagee, he will be protected beyond the sum which he has actually advanced at the date when a junior lien is placed on record, if made without actual notice of the second encumbrance.¹¹ Where the amount and kind of the advances are at the option of the mortgagee, it has been held that he cannot exercise such options arbitrarily;¹² but the failure of the mortgagee to advance all that he promised does not, in the absence of evidence that the mortgagor has suffered damage, relieve the mortgagor from liability for advances actually made.¹³

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 112. — Performance of Contract or Other Obligation

The intention of the parties as expressed in the mortgage determines the extent of the security afforded by a mortgage to secure the performance of a contract by the mortgagor.

The extent of the security afforded by a mortgage to secure the performance of a contract or other obligation by the mortgagor depends on the intention of the parties as expressed in the mortgage instrument.¹⁴ Unless the language of the mortgage is clear and unambiguous, it will not ordinarily be construed to secure the performance of a contract or obligation other than to pay money as stipulated in the mortgage.¹⁵ A mortgage given to secure the performance of a contract which is subsequently broken by the mortgagee is unenforceable by him.¹⁶

The intention of the parties determines whether the mortgage secures the mortgagee against his liability as surety for the mortgagor.

Whether the mortgage secures the mortgagee against his liability as surety for the mortgagor depends on the intention of the parties.¹⁷

§ 114. — Fees and Costs

The intention of the parties governs in determining whether costs and expenses paid or incurred by the mortgagee are secured by the mortgage.

In determining whether costs and expenses paid or incurred by the mortgagee are secured by the mortgage, the intention of the parties governs, as in case of other debts and liabilities.¹⁸ Of course, costs unnecessarily incurred by the mortgagee are not secured by the mortgage.¹⁹

§ 115. — Extension to Other Debts or Liabilities

As a general rule, subject to some qualifications, a chattel mortgage to secure a specific expressed indebtedness cannot be extended to secure another and different indebtedness.

As a general rule, a chattel mortgage given to secure a certain indebtedness therein expressed cannot be extended to become a lien for another and different indebtedness,²⁰ at least as against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers.²¹ However, the substitution of new notes as evidence of the mortgage debt does not render a mortgage open to the objection that it has been extended to cover a new indebtedness,²² especially where such a substitution was contemplated at the time of giving the mortgage.²³

On the other hand, where there has been a compliance with any controlling statute as to the varying of written instruments,²⁴ the parties may agree that the mortgage shall stand as security for a different debt from that described.²⁵ As between the parties, such an agreement is valid as a mortgage, although not executed with the formalities required as to such an instrument,²⁶ but it cannot be enforced to the detriment of creditors or junior encumbrancers.²⁷ The parties cannot, however, by a subsequent parol agreement, extend the mortgage so as to secure debts not contemplated at the time the instrument was executed,²⁸ although such an agreement may amount to a new mortgage in parol,²⁹ and it has been held, where the consideration of a mortgage and note has failed, that the mortgage may be retained, under a parol agreement, as security for future advances to be made under a new agreement.³⁰

C. PROPERTY CONVEYED

In determining what property is included within the description of a chattel mortgage, the intention of the parties is controlling, and such intention is to be gathered from the words used in the instrument, giving them their ordinary signification if technical terms are not therein employed, and from the surrounding circumstances where necessary.

In determining what property is included by the description of a chattel mortgage, the intention of the parties will govern, as ascertained from the entire instrument,³² and from the words which the parties have employed, considered, when necessary, with reference to facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction.³³ If possible, that construction should be given which will admit of some meaning being given to each of the words used.³⁴

eral description are followed by a specific and minute description, the latter limits the former to the property particularly described.³⁶ Under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, where general words follow the enumeration of particular property in a chattel mortgage, the general words will be so construed as to include property of the same kind and nature as that particularly described,³⁷ and to exclude property falling within a different category.³⁸ This rule is, however, not conclusive³⁹ and it should not be resorted to unless the meaning of the language used is obscure or doubtful.⁴⁰

Construction in connection with other instruments. An inventory or schedule of the mortgaged property referred to in the mortgage is to be construed in connection with the description contained in the mortgage,⁴¹ and may extend the mortgage to property not specifically described therein,⁴² or may

Insurance

Where a chattel mortgage requires the mortgagor to keep the property insured for the benefit of the mortgagee, upon the failure or refusal of the mortgagor to effect such insurance the mortgagee or his assignee may properly procure it and obtain reimbursement for its cost as a part of the mortgage debt. Where, however, the mortgage contains no covenant to insure, the mortgagor is not liable therefor.—James B. Drake & Sons v. Nickerson, 121 A. 86, 123 Me. 11—11 C.J. p 498 note 84—42 C.J. p 762 notes 13—15.

Taxes

(1) A statute giving a mortgagee of real estate a lien for taxes paid by him is not applicable to a chattel mortgage, and taxes paid by the mortgagee cannot be added to the debt. — Dunsmuir v. Port Angeles Gas, etc., Co., 63 P. 1095, 24 Wash. 104.

(2) However, under statutes imposing a tax on sales of commodities such as electricity, the tax is considered a part of the purchase price and is secured by a mortgage executed to secure payment of the purchase price.—Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Roth, 104 S.W.2d 207, 193 Ark. 1015.

limit it to the property specifically described in the schedule.⁴³

In a proper case, descriptions of the mortgaged property in successive mortgages may be considered in determining what property is included in the mortgage.⁴⁴ However, although the description of property in successive mortgages is substantially the same, they may be held to cover different property by reason of the fact of their discrepancy in details of description,⁴⁵ although where several mortgages are given on the same property, a slight variance in the description of the property in the last mortgage will not limit its operation, when it is apparent that the parties intended to include the property described in the prior mortgages.⁴⁶ The fact that certain exemptions are expressly reserved in a mortgage does not affect a later mortgage containing no provision as to exemptions.⁴⁷

Particular words. As a general rule, the words used are to be understood in their usual and ordinary meaning,⁴⁸ in order to sustain the instrument,⁴⁹ and are not to be construed in a frivolous or ineffectual sense.⁵⁰ However, words mutually employed by the parties without regard to their proper and logical meaning will be construed according to the manifest intention of the parties.⁵¹ The general rule is applied to such terms as apparatus,⁵² appendages,⁵³ appliances,⁵⁴ appurtenances,⁵⁵ cattle,⁵⁶ equipment,⁵⁷ fixtures,⁵⁸ foundry,⁵⁹ furniture,⁶⁰ improvements,⁶¹ live stock,⁶² machinery,⁶³ supplies,⁶⁴ sawmill,⁶⁵ separator,⁶⁶ and threshing machine.⁶⁷

Going business. Where it is the evident intention of the parties to mortgage a going business it will cover all property used in connection therewith for the convenient operation thereof,⁶⁸ but it has been held that a mortgage of the entire assets of a business does not necessarily include its good will.⁶⁹

Exempt property is not included in a general description covering all of the mortgagor's property.⁷⁰ To include such property, the intent should be made manifest and not left to conjecture or doubt.⁷¹

When a word is used in a technical or peculiar sense, as applicable to some trade or business, it will be construed according to the meaning thus at-

§ 117. Property Included in Description in General

A mortgage will include all of the mortgagor's property ascertainable from the description therein.

In general, a mortgage will include all the property ascertainable from the description therein; but property not so ascertainable and not within the description will not pass under it.⁷⁴ The description will be liberally construed in determining what property is included.⁷⁵ Thus, where the mortgaged property is particularly described, the description will be so construed as to cover all property falling within the description, and not merely a portion of it;⁷⁶ but it will not be construed so as to include property not owned by the mortgagor and not intended to be conveyed.⁷⁷

Location. The domicile of the mortgagor fixes the location of personal property included in the description in the mortgage.⁷⁸

The date given in a chattel mortgage becomes a part of the description of the property.⁷⁹

§ 118. After-Acquired Property or Interests

The intention of the parties governs in determining whether after-acquired property is covered by the mortgage; but the description will not be extended beyond its terms.

In determining whether a mortgage covers after-acquired property, the court will, as nearly as possible, carry out the intention of the parties.⁸⁰ The description will not, however, be extended beyond its terms.⁸¹ Although a mortgage expressly covers future acquisitions to the property described therein, it does not include all property thereafter acquired by the mortgagor,⁸² unless such property is within the description applicable to after-acquired property.⁸³ Accordingly, where the property to be acquired in the future is expressly limited to a certain class, or to a use in a certain business, the mortgage will not extend to another class, or use in a new and distinct branch of the business.⁸⁴ A description of after-acquired property in a schedule annexed to a chattel mortgage or property designated therein will be given the same effect as if it had been inserted in the body of the instrument.⁸⁵

Statutes relating to liens on property not yet acquired and providing that no lien or mortgage shall be created upon the future earnings of any machine operated with men or animal, have no application to an assignment of rights under an existing contract.⁸⁶

§ 120. Accessions to, or Products of, Existing Chattels

Accessions and additions to the mortgaged chattels ordinarily belong to the mortgagee, unless they are so extensive as to destroy the identity of the original chattels.

As a general rule, the increment of, and accessions to, the mortgaged chattels belong to the mortgagee.⁸⁷ Under this rule, when a mortgage is given on raw material or goods in a state of partial completion, the finished product will be subject to the mortgage,⁸⁸ even though the increase in value has been large,⁸⁹ provided the original chattel can still be identified.⁹⁰ Likewise, new material or articles added to the mortgaged articles by way of replacement or repairs pass under the mortgage,⁹¹ although the contrary may be true where the new article is a distinct and independent item of personal

Commingled after-acquired property

It is the rule in Michigan that a chattel mortgage does not include after-acquired property, unless the property to which it is added is so mingled with it as not to be readily distinguishable therefrom.—In re Drag, D.C.Mich., 254 F. 474.

Mechanical or industrial plant

(1) Property added to an industrial or mechanical plant, which becomes an essential and integral part thereof, passes under a mortgage of the entire property constructed or to be constructed.—In re East Stroudsburg Glass Co., D.C.Pa., 247 F. 614—11 C.J. p 502 note 38.

(2) This rule applies as well as under a clause including machinery and appliances thereafter to be placed in such a plant for the purpose of maintenance and repair.—Mackall-Paine Veneer Co. v. Vancouver Plywood Co., 32 P.2d 530, 177 Wash. 503.—Straus v. Wilsonian Inv. Co., 31 P. 2d 516, 177 Wash. 167.—Bank of California v. Clear Lake Lumber Co., 264 P. 705, 146 Wash. 543—11 C.J. p 502 note 39.

(3) This is true even though the additions are made by an assignee or property and in no sense an article of repair.⁹² The doctrine of accession has no application to feed and services furnished to mortgaged live stock while it is in the sheriff's possession after the commencement of foreclosure proceedings.⁹³

§ 121. — Increase of Animals

A mortgage expressly covering the increase of animals will be enforced. In the absence of such an express provision, whether or not such increase is covered generally depends on whether the mortgagee secures a lien on or title to the mortgaged property.

A mortgage of an animal which expressly covers the increase will be enforced according to its terms,⁹⁴ and, where the increase is mentioned, it will be construed as future increase⁹⁵ and not as increase in existence at the time of the mortgage.⁹⁶ An express agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the offspring of animals shall be subject to the mortgage will be enforced, notwithstanding a statutory provision that the lien of a chattel mortgage shall not cover the offspring of a mortgaged animal.⁹⁷

In determining whether or not a mortgage of an animal, which contains no express reference to the increase thereof, covers such increase, the nature of the mortgage, as passing title to the animal or as merely creating a lien thereon, must be considered. In those jurisdictions in which the mortgagee is vested with the legal title to the mortgaged property, it is generally held that the lien of a chattel mortgage on domestic animals extends to the increase of the animals during the life of the mortgage, even though the mortgage is silent as to the increase.⁹⁸ The same rule also applies, at least as between the parties, in some jurisdictions where a mortgage is considered a mere lien.⁹⁹ Generally, however, in those jurisdictions where the mortgage creates a mere lien without passing title, particularly where a statute so provides, the lien does not cover the increase of the animals mortgaged unless expressly included, and the mortgagor in possession may control and dispose of such increase.¹ The rule as to trust deeds is the same as in the case of chattel mortgages.²

grantee of the mortgagor.—Straus v. Wilsonian Inv. Co., supra.

(4) Where, however, the additions and alterations in a mortgaged plant are so extensive as to destroy the identity of the old plant and result in an entirely new plant, the lien of the mortgage does not apply to the new plant.—*Metropolitan Nat. An after-acquired drive belt used in connection with a steam threshing outfit is an entirely distinct and independent article of manufacture from the engine, separator, or other parts of the outfit covered by a chattel mortgage.—Campbell Implement Co. v. Nelson, 198 N.W. 401, 159 Minn. 163.

Particular language unnecessary

Under the rule stated in the text, the use of particular wording to include the increase within the terms of the mortgage is not necessary, it being sufficient if the language employed fairly imports such an intention.—Brown v. Schwab, 233 P. 593, 594, 27 Ariz. 457, 39 A.L.R. 150.

In Nebraska

(1) It has been held that "a provision in a mortgage of domestic animals, assuming to give the mortgagee a lien on the increase to be thereafter begotten, is nothing more than an agreement for a lien, which, without possession, vests no legal right to, or interest in, such increase."—Battle Creek Valley Bank v. Madison First Nat. Bank, 88 N.W. 145, 62 Neb. 825, 56 L.R.A. 124.

(2) But this rule has no application to a mortgage given during gestation and such a mortgage creates a lien upon the animals resulting from such gestation.—Leisy v. Kane, 259 N.W. 526, 128 Neb. 594.—Peterson v. Citizens' Bank of Stuart, 220 N.W. 575, 117 Neb. 327.

Increase held covered

Mortgage of "all cattle and horses branded O X O, /o," running on particular range, which was followed by statement, "The mortgagor agrees not to sell any more cattle than the amount of increase each year," covered increase of such cattle, and contemplated that such increase would be branded in like manner.—*Brown v. Where, under the circumstances, the lien of a mortgage extends to the increase of animals, it has been applied to sheep,³ hogs,⁴ cattle,⁵ and horses.⁶

Exempt property. Where the increase of animals comes within the express terms of the mortgage, such increase, although exempt property, is covered by the mortgage.⁷

Duration of lien. As against a subsequent mortgagee⁸ or a purchaser without actual or constructive knowledge of the mortgage,⁹ the lien on increase does not continue after a suitable period of nurture has elapsed. However, as between the parties the lien may continue;¹⁰ and it has been held that the fact that a chattel mortgage specifically covers the increase of live stock will cause the lien to continue during the existence of the mortgage.¹¹

§ 122. — Wool Grown on Mortgaged Sheep

Where a chattel mortgage is considered as a lien, in the absence of an expression of intention to the contrary, a mortgage of sheep does not extend to wool thereafter shorn from them.

In jurisdictions which consider a chattel mortgage a mere lien, a mortgage of sheep does not extend to the wool thereafter shorn from them,¹² even where the mortgage includes the "increase,"¹³ although such term has been construed to include wool thereafter shorn.¹⁴ A trust deed or mortgage of sheep, including the increase and all appendages, includes the wool on the sheep,¹⁵ and where a mortgage expressly includes the wool clipped from certain ewes, it refers to wool thereafter to be clipped.¹⁶

§ 123. Specific Kinds of Property

§ 124. — Crops

The intention of the parties governs as to what crops are included therein. If the mortgaged crop is to be grown by the mortgagor, it will not include crops grown by other persons.

The question as to what crops are included in a mortgage depends on the intention of the parties as ascertained from the whole instrument,¹⁷ giving it a reasonable construction.¹⁸

Minn.—Helgeson v. Farmers' Co-op. Ass'n, Jackson, 199 N.W. 821, 160 Minn. 109.

The acceptance of a crop mortgage containing a covenant that the premises and crop are free from all other encumbrances does not estop the mortgagee from showing that a prior mortgage did not cover the crops grown and to be grown on the premises.¹⁹

Location or ownership of land. Where the land on which the crop is to be grown is definitely located, the mortgage will not cover crops grown on other lands,²⁰ even though the mortgagor fails to cultivate a crop on the land designated.²¹ Likewise, a mortgage on crops to be grown on land owned by the mortgagor will ordinarily not include crops on other land rented by him;²² but where the mortgage refers in general terms to the entire crop grown by the mortgagor or which he may aid in the cultivation of, it is broad enough to include his interest in crops grown on lands rented by him,²³ except as against subsequent mortgagees.²⁴ A mortgage of crops on "all my lands" has been held to include a parcel claimed by the mortgagor, although shortly after the execution of the mortgage, in an action against him, it was decided that he was not the owner thereof;²⁵ but a mortgage describing the property as "my entire crop to be grown on my own land, or any other land in a certain county," does not include lands subsequently purchased by the mortgagor.²⁶

Person by whom crops are to be grown. As a general rule, where the mortgage purports to cover crops to be grown by the mortgagor it will not include crops grown by his tenants or other persons,²⁷ but will cover the crops grown by him on the land designated.²⁸ A mortgage, however, on crops to be grown during a certain year, on certain land, will include crops grown on the premises by tenants and sharecroppers of the mortgagor.²⁹ A mortgage on all crops grown by the mortgagor or "his family" will cover crops grown by a minor son of the mortgagor, even though the mortgagor subsequently emancipated his minor son who continued to be a member of his family;³⁰ and a mortgage embracing all crops grown by the mortgagor, or under his direction, on his land, will cover a crop grown by the mortgagor and his sister who subsisted on supplies furnished by the mortgagee under the mortgage.³¹ Likewise, where a part of the tenant's crop is grown by his son without a cropper's agreement the whole is subject to the tenant's crop mortgage.³²

The individual crop of a mortgagor, grown on his land, will not be covered by a mortgage executed jointly with another, designating crops to be grown by them jointly in a partnership transaction;³³ nor will crops grown by the husband be covered by a mortgage given by the wife on crops to be grown by her on certain land and to secure a debt by her, even though he joins in the execution of the instrument.³⁴

Time of growth. A mortgage on all crops to be grown on certain land, during a certain year, will include crops subsequently planted that year;³⁵ and when the mortgage is given to secure a note due in the fall of the year after its execution there is a presumption that the crop of that year is intended.³⁶ While a mortgage covering crops raised during a certain year and until the debt secured is fully paid, will not cover crops raised during succeeding years,³⁷ a mortgage covering crops to be grown by the mortgagor on leased land for a certain year, "and every year thereafter," until the mortgage debt is paid, will cover all crops grown on such lands by the mortgagor during the life of the lease.³⁸ A mortgage on all the crops grown on certain premises during the life of the mortgage does not cover crops grown after the mortgagor's death.³⁹

Under statutory provisions, in some states the lien of a mortgage on growing crops or crops to be grown attaches only to the crops next maturing after the execution of such mortgage.⁴⁰ Under a statute providing that a mortgage of future crops shall be valid against crops planted within twelve months after its execution, a mortgage of a future crop will be presumed to cover only the year immediately following the mortgage.⁴¹

§ 125. — Household Goods

§ 126. — Stocks in Trade

The question as to what property is included in a mortgage of a stock in trade depends on the intention of the parties. In order to cover additions to, or substitutions for, the stock existing when the mortgage was made, an intention to that effect must be expressed in the mortgage.

As a general rule, the question as to what property is included in a mortgage of a stock in trade depends on the intention of the parties as expressed in the mortgage, and considered in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.⁴² However, a mortgage of a stock of goods, as such, will not include property which is not a part of the stock and is not offered for sale in the ordinary course of business.⁴³ Where the mortgage describes the nature of the merchandise, it will cover only such goods as clearly come within its terms.⁴⁴ Where a description of the place containing the stock is alone relied on to identify it, goods must actually come within the place in order to come within the description.⁴⁵ The mere fact, however, that the stock was subsequently removed does not take it out of the operation of the mortgage, where it remained identifiable and where the parties intended that it should continue to be covered.⁴⁶

Additions to, or substitutions for, stock. A mortgage of a stock in trade under a general description covers only such goods as are in stock at the time of the execution of the mortgage⁴⁷ especially where words are used which limit the application to the stock then on hand,⁴⁸ and when mixed or confused with goods subsequently acquired, as against third persons claiming the stock of goods, the burden is on the mortgagee to identify the part covered by the mortgage.⁴⁹ In order to cover additions to, or substitutions for, the stock existing when the mortgage was made such an intention must be expressed in the mortgage.⁵⁰ When the

55. In Georgia

(1) Under statute existing in this jurisdiction, a mortgage or bill of sale or deed of trust to secure a debt covering a stock of goods or other things in bulk, changing in specifics, attaches to additional goods purchased in the usual course of business to replenish such stock irrespective of any express provision to that effect in the instrument itself.—Hardin v. Rubin, 151 S.E. 31, 169 Ga. 608—Merchants' & Mechanics' Bank v. Beard, 134 S.E. 107, 162 Ga. 446, answers to certified questions conformed to 134 S.E. 479, 35 Ga.App. 692—Peoples Credit Clothing Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 188 S.E. 913, 54 Ga.App. 832—Downing Co. v. Jones, 176 S.E. 904, 50 Ga.App. 9—11 C.J. p 507 note 19.

(2) The statute does not relate to an entire change of stock of goods in bulk, but to a change in a stock of goods in bulk changing in specifics.—Peoples Credit Clothing Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., supra.

(3) Accordingly, where a mortgage or bill of sale to secure debt is created on a stock of goods which is totally destroyed by fire, and another new, separate, and distinct stock of goods is purchased, it would not come within the lien of the instrument covering the totally destroyed stock.—Peoples Credit Clothing Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., supra.

A mortgage of book accounts will cover only those which the parties intended to include as appears from the instrument.⁶⁰ While in some jurisdictions a chattel mortgage on book accounts covers also the proceeds of such accounts, where they are in the hands of the mortgagor, whether or not used to replenish the stock,⁶¹ in other jurisdictions it is held that the money collected on such accounts will not be subject to the lien of a mortgage.⁶² A mortgage of book accounts does not cover the amount due from a factor with whom goods have been

Future accounts. A mortgage of book accounts will not include future accounts unless such an intention is clearly expressed in the mortgage.⁶⁴ A mortgage of future accounts, however, includes all unpaid accounts which are the proper subject of book entry, whether or not such entry has been made.⁶⁵ A mortgage of a stock of goods, together with the accounts which may accrue from the sale thereof and all other accounts not theretofore transferred, will be construed to cover all accounts receivable arising from sales of the mortgaged stock; but it will not be construed, at least as against third persons, as covering general accounts or choses in action not receivable from and on account of sales made from the stock.⁶⁶

§ 129. Extension to or Substitution of Other Property

An agreed substitution of other property for that originally covered by the mortgage is valid between the parties to the instrument.

While the lien of a mortgage will ordinarily not be extended so as to include property not particularly described therein,⁶⁷ an agreed substitution of other property for that originally covered by the mortgage,⁶⁸ although the agreement is oral,⁶⁹ is valid as between the parties and those having constructive notice thereof,⁷⁰ but invalid as to third persons, including creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice,⁷¹ unless the substituted property passes under the doctrine of accession.⁷² A stipulation to exchange the chattels embraced in the mortgage for others will be strictly construed and will not be extended beyond its plain terms.⁷³ If the property substituted for that originally mortgaged is so changed that it cannot be identified by the original description, the lien of the mortgage will not attach to it.⁷⁴ An agreement that the mortgaged property shall be sold and the proceeds ap-

Where a book case mentioned in the act of mortgage was later exchanged for another, the latter was not covered by the mortgage.—Remington-Rand v. Profits Island Gravel Co., La.App., 144 So. 638, opinion reinstated 150 So. 76.

Mortgage of cattle

Where cattle covered by chattel mortgage ceased to exist and there was no increase thereof, and those which mortgagors had at time of commencement of mortgage foreclosure action were entirely different cattle, and mortgage did not cover after-acquired property, prima facie mortgagee had no lien on such cattle.—P. Agreement as oral mortgage

Oral agreement permitting mortgagor to sell mortgaged cattle provided he replaces them constitutes oral mortgage on substitute cattle.—Paska v. Saunders, 153 A. 451, 103 Vt. 204.

Under statutes requiring writing and subscription

(1) Where a statute requires that mortgages of personal property be in writing subscribed by the mortgagor, the parties to the mortgage cannot by parol agreement substitute personal property not embraced in the mortgage for property included in the mortgage, so as to transfer the lien to the substituted property.—Bloch v. Edwards, 22 So. 600, 116 Ala. 90.

Covenant as to "trade or exchange" of chattels

However, a chattel mortgage containing a covenant that if the mortgagor should "trade or exchange" any of the mortgaged property, the property so obtained shall be held as security in place of that disposed of, includes whatever the mortgagor acquires in the place of the property disposed of, whether acquired by purchase or by "trade or exchange."—Hulsizer v. plied on the mortgage debt will not extend the lien of the mortgage to the proceeds of property not included therein.⁷⁵ An agreement to pay,⁷⁶ or an actual part payment of,⁷⁷ the mortgage debt, by a third person, will not extend the mortgage so as to include property owned by such person.

Necessity of delivery. Where other property is substituted for that originally included in a mortgage it has been held that a formal delivery of such substituted property is necessary to make the mortgage valid as to it.⁷⁸

Ratification of the exchange by the mortgagee has been held to render the substituted property subject to the lien of the mortgage, although there is no exchange of possession and no refileing of the mortgage.⁷⁹

Laches; waiver. Laches on the part of the mortgagee in claiming substituted property will deprive him of his rights thereto.⁸⁰ A mortgagee's failure to exercise a power of selection as to the property covered by his mortgage constitutes a voluntary relinquishment or waiver thereof.⁸¹

VIII. RECORDING, FILING, OR REGISTRATION

§ 130. General Statement

Statutory provisions generally require that mortgages be recorded, the object being the protection of innocent third persons who may acquire rights in the mortgaged property.

The statutes concerning mortgages generally make it necessary, in order that the mortgage may be valid as to designated persons, that it either be spread on the records, or the mortgage itself, or a true copy thereof, be filed in a place designated by the statute.⁸² Requirements as to registration being entirely of statutory origin, the statute must in each case be examined to determine what instruments are to be recorded, the sufficiency of recording, and the effect of a failure to record,⁸³ and such a statute will be strictly construed.⁸⁴ In some jurisdictions it is held that such statutes must be strictly complied with⁸⁵ while, in other jurisdic-

The object of a statute requiring registration or recordation where possession of the mortgaged chattel is left with the mortgagor is to protect innocent persons and prevent fraud and deception by precluding a mortgagor of personal property from holding himself out to the world as an unqualified owner,⁸⁷ and to make the recording of the mortgage equivalent, as near as may be, to physical possession by the mortgagee.⁸⁸ A statute requiring recordation will not validate mortgages declared invalid by a previously enacted statute concerning assignments for the benefit of creditors.⁸⁹

A statute referring to the recording of mortgages conveying legal title is not applicable to a mortgage of an equitable title;⁹⁰ nor does a statute providing for the filing or recording of mortgages apply to a transaction which is a pledge.⁹¹ Mortgages have been held not embraced by a statute requiring a record of all deeds of trust and "mortgages whatsoever,"⁹² nor by a statute relating to liens on merchandise or the proceeds thereof,⁹³ but an act requiring deeds and conveyances of personal property to be recorded has been held to apply to mortgages.⁹⁴

Authority to record. Where a mortgage is executed pursuant to an agreement the mortgagor is authorized to file it for record,⁹⁵ and a person to whom he delivers it for this purpose is authorized as his agent to file it.⁹⁶ So, the mortgagor may act as the agent of the mortgagee in delivering the mortgage for record.⁹⁷

The failure to file or refile a mortgage does not deprive the mortgagee of his interest in the mortgage but merely makes it void as against the persons designated by the recording act.⁹⁸ An instrument may operate as evidence of an indebtedness, although inoperative as a mortgage because not filed.⁹⁹

The validity, applicability, and repeal of statutory provisions requiring recordation are determined by the general rules applicable.

The law as to filing, in force at the time the mortgage is executed, is applicable,¹ and changes in the requirements of the recording acts cast no additional duties on a mortgagee who, prior to its passage, has filed or recorded his instrument in conformity with the then recording laws.² When statutory provisions relating to the recording of chattel mortgages have been enacted at different times, the later enactment will control in the event of any repugnancy between the provisions.³

Where the repeal by implication of a recording act is asserted, the general rules against such repeals will be applied;⁴ and a recording statute will not be regarded as affected by another act which does not provide for its repeal and is not inconsistent with it.⁵ Provisions of a recording act, omitted from a codification adopted as the law of the jurisdiction, are regarded as repealed.⁶

As affecting rights. No matter how strict the requirements of the recording act are, they are not objectionable as interfering with the right of property.⁷ A provision making void as to bona fide purchasers an unrecorded mortgage even when executed in a state where registration is not required does not deny the citizens of such a state any rights in that it fails to give full faith and credit to the public acts of such other state.⁸

§ 132. Instruments Entitled to Record

To be entitled to record the instrument must be of such nature and so executed as to come within the provisions of the statute.

In order that a mortgage may be admitted to record, it must be proved in the manner provided by statute.⁹ A provision that a mortgage, required to

Instruments which have been held not entitled to filing or recording as a mortgage include agreements in writing to execute a mortgage,¹¹ and bills of sale,¹² but a contract to grant a lien on property to be acquired by the grantee creates an equitable lien and is entitled to be recorded, under a statute providing for recording of such liens.¹³

Mortgage without affidavit attached

Where a mortgage for purchase price of stock of merchandise, not followed by delivery of possession to mortgagee, was filed for record with the city clerk and the register of deeds, as required by Comp.L.Mich. 1915 § 11983, but the so-called affidavit attached to the instrument filed in the office of the city clerk, although signed by the mortgagor, did not contain any jurat signed by a notary or other officer authorized to take oaths, the mortgage was void as against creditors under such statute, prohibiting city clerk and register of deeds from accepting such instrument for filing unless affidavit is attached thereto.—In re Jarnol, D.C. Mich., 283 F. 547.

Where officer and witnesses not disqualified

Where it does not appear from face of a mortgage that officer taking the acknowledgment or the subscribing witnesses are legally disqualified within Rev.L.1910 § 4036, by their interest in property, the mortgage may properly be received for record.—*Lankford v. Mortgage covering future advances

A mortgage which secured a two thousand dollar debt and contemplated future advances of money was not valid as to three thousand five hundred fifty dollars because of recitals that mortgage was subject to another mortgage and other liens and that if mortgagee paid or retired any of them mortgagee would become subrogated to rights of owners of mortgage or liens, since essential purpose of statute voiding chattel mortgages covering future advances as against creditors and subsequent purchasers unless mortgage is filed is to enable third persons to know from examination of records precise amount of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgages. The aim of statute voiding chattel mortgages covering future advances as against creditors and subsequent purchasers or mortgagees unless mortgage or copy thereof is filed was to obviate difficulty and uncertainty in determining amount of liens existing against property subject to chattel mortgage.—Timmer v. Talbot, D.C.Mich., 19 F.Supp. 687, affirmed, C.C.A., Lemmen v. Timmer, 89 F.2d 1011.

Reservation of title to automobile sold until all payments were made, not being a "mortgage," but "conditional sale," is not required to be recorded.—Mitchell v. Williams, 124 So. 430, 155 Miss. 343.

In Washington, the statute providing that a mortgage for three hundred dollars or more "may" be recorded, but "must" be filed, makes recordation of such chattel mortgage optional, but filing and indexing is essential.—Goddard v. Morgan, 74 P. 2d 894, 193 Wash. 83.—First Nat. Bank v. White-Dulany Co., 209 P. 861, 121 Wash. 386—11 C.J. p 510 note 70 [b].

a. In General

Recording is essential only as required by statute.

The recording or registration of a mortgage is essential only as required by statute,¹⁴ and unless required is unnecessary even as against creditors or purchasers.¹⁵ In any event, a failure to record the instrument is available only to persons having some right or interest in the property¹⁶ and not to mere strangers¹⁷ or trespassers.¹⁸ Where, however, recording is required and for any reason the statute cannot be complied with, then the mortgagee must take possession of the mortgaged property to preserve his rights.¹⁹ A statute requiring filing of a mortgage covering future advances applies to extensions of credit for sales of merchandise or for

Interest to be shown

Where a complaint, in a suit to foreclose mortgage, does not show that defendants, other than mortgagor, are creditors of latter or subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, they cannot question sufficiency of mortgage by demurrer for absence of allegation that it was recorded.—Rummelsburg v. McDonald, 226 P. 412, 66 Cal.App. 380.

Creditor of vendor of mortgage

Claim to property levied on, based on mortgage executed by transferee of defendant in execution, is not affected by failure promptly to record mortgage, since mortgage was good as between mortgagor and mortgagee and as against one who was a creditor of the person who sold the property to the mortgagor, but was not creditor of, or purchaser from, mortgagor, without filing and without recording.—Samuelson v. Weisberg, 177 A. 254, 13 N.J.Misc. 193.

Purchaser not for value

That mortgage on automobile was not registered when automobile was delivered to purchaser from mortgagor does not effect mortgagee's ownership, absent showing purchase for value.—Chandler v. Conabeer, 153 S. E. 313, 198 N.C. 757.

other things of value as well as to cash.²⁰

Possession of mortgagor. Under a statute requiring recording where actual possession is retained by the mortgagor, "actual possession" is held to mean a real, as distinguished from a theoretical, possession.²¹

Partial invalidity. Failure to register a mortgage will not invalidate it as to property embraced therein concerning which the statute does not require registration, although it may be invalid as to other property.²²

Goods at sea or abroad. When so provided by statute, it is not necessary to the validity of a mortgage of a ship or vessel, nor of goods at sea or abroad, that the mortgage be recorded if the mortgagee takes possession of them as soon as may be after their arrival in the state.²³

b. Exempt Property

A mortgage of property exempt from seizure by creditors need not be recorded, unless nonexempt property is included therein.

Where the property covered by a mortgage is exempt from seizure by the mortgagor's creditors, it is not necessary that the mortgage be recorded to be good against creditors, even though possession is not transferred;²⁴ but it has been held that, where the mortgage covers both exempt and nonexempt property, it must be recorded.²⁵

§ 134. Necessity as between the Parties

Unless so required by statute, recording is not essential to the validity of the mortgage as between the parties thereto.

Filing, record, or registration is not, in the absence of statute, essential to the validity of a mortgage as between the parties,²⁶ and the mortgagor's obligation under the unrecorded mortgage remains unchanged even though he has contracted other obligations which cannot be paid except by recourse to the mortgaged property.²⁷ A creditor of the mortgagor, himself a party to the mortgage, cannot avail himself of the invalidity of the mortgage because of failure of the mortgagee to file it or take possession of the mortgaged property.²⁸

As a general rule, the representatives of a deceased party stand on the same footing as the original parties with reference to the validity of an unrecorded mortgage,²⁹ although it has been held that, in case of the death of an insolvent mortgagor while in possession of the property, his representatives might claim the property as against the mortgagee.³⁰

The necessity for recording mortgages as against an assignee of the mortgagor for benefit of creditors is considered in the title Assignments for Benefit of Creditors § 187, and as against a trustee in insolvency in the C.J.S. title Insolvency § 11, also 32 C.J. p 853 note 92 et seq.

§ 136. Necessity as against Creditors

Unrecorded mortgages are ordinarily void as against creditors of the mortgagee.

While in the absence of statute an unfiled mortgage is a valid lien against general creditors from the time of its execution and delivery,³¹ the effect of the recording acts generally is to render void as to creditors an unrecorded mortgage, unless possession has been taken by the mortgagee thereunder.³² Hence, the property covered by such a mortgage is subject to seizure on attachment³³ or on execution issued on a judgment recovered against the mortgagor.³⁴ The invalidity of an unfiled mortgage applies only to the creditors of the original mortgagor and does not extend to the creditors of an assignee of the mortgagor in the absence of a novation.³⁵ The necessity for recording exists under these acts regardless of the intention of the parties or the presence or absence of good faith,³⁶ or even though the mortgage was given and received in good faith, to secure a loan which did not add to the amount of the obligation of the mortgagor;³⁷ nor is it necessary for a subsequent creditor to show affirmatively that he was deceived or misled by the failure of a mortgagee to record his mortgage, unless the statute relating to the recording of mortgages makes such condition.³⁸ A creditor who, as such, is entitled to protect his rights, as against an unfiled mortgage, is not prevented from so doing by the fact that he takes a mortgage to secure his indebtedness, although he is not in a position to be protected as a bona fide encumbrancer.³⁹ The necessity for recording as against creditors of the mortgagor may be implied from a provision that the mortgage must be renewed or refiled in a certain time to be valid against creditors.⁴⁰ An agreement not in fact a mortgage is not invalid as to creditors because not recorded as a mortgage.⁴¹

Evidence of promise to secure payment of debt

Burden on creditor. Where it is made to appear on the trial that a mortgage of chattels is bona fide, it devolves on a creditor to establish his superior equity by showing that he belongs to the class of creditors who are entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage as against them, because not duly or seasonably recorded.⁴²

Time of creation of debt. Ordinarily, the recording acts are construed to apply to creditors who were such prior to the execution of the mortgage as well as to those who become creditors subsequent thereto;⁴³ but in some jurisdictions the contrary has been held and an unrecorded mortgage is regarded as valid as against creditors who became such prior to the execution of the mortgage.⁴⁴ A

"All creditors" construed

Landlord, who secured a valid pledge of tenant's tobacco crop to secure a prior indebtedness prior to recording of defendants' mortgage thereon, was entitled to priority over defendants in proceeds of tobacco, "all creditors," as used in Amendment of 1916 to Ky.St. § 496, providing that no debt or mortgage conveying legal or equitable title to real or personal estate shall be valid against creditors without recording, meaning all subsequent creditors, and such antecedent creditors as have secured, prior to the recording, some equity in the property.—Mason & Moody v. creditor's claim is regarded as having arisen during the time for which a mortgage was withheld from record where, during that time, he has renewed or extended an existing debt.⁴⁵

Contingent liabilities. The term "creditors" has been held to include indorsers, guarantors, or sureties for the mortgagor,⁴⁶ but as to sureties there is authority to the contrary;⁴⁷ and such term will not include an indorsee where the liability of the indorsers has not become fixed.⁴⁸

Creditors of mortgagees and purchasers. Creditors of the mortgagee cannot avail themselves of a failure to file the mortgage where the only interest of the mortgagee in the property was secured by reason of such mortgage.⁴⁹ Where the mortgaged property is sold subject to the mortgage, it is held that the recording statutes protect creditors of the purchaser, since the purchaser becomes a mortgagor within the meaning of the statute,⁵⁰ although there is authority to the contrary.⁵¹

Proceeds of sale. Although the mortgage is void as to creditors it is good as between the parties. Hence, the mortgagor, while in possession and before levy has been made by creditors on the property, may sell the chattels with the consent of the mortgagee, and the proceeds when paid to the mortgagee cannot be reached by the creditors.⁵²

In many, but not in all, jurisdictions the failure to record the mortgage renders it void only as to creditors who, prior to its filing for record, have obtained a lien on the mortgaged property.

Although recording statutes usually provide that an unrecorded mortgage is void as to creditors, the prevailing doctrine makes the mortgage void only against those creditors who obtain a lien on the mortgaged property by attachment, execution, or otherwise before the instrument is filed for record.⁵³

Where creditor garnishes person- alty covered by unrecorded trust agreement executed before service of garnishment process, he does not acquire a lien superior to that of trustees and beneficiary under Comp.L. 1913 § 6753, where the debt existed before the execution of the trust agreement, and the creditor has not since altered his position to his detriment.—Petrie v. Wyman, 159 N. W. 616, 35 N.D. 126.

Execution lien superior to mortgage

(1) Judgment creditor who levies execution on property covered by unfiled mortgage acquires lien superior to mortgage. In conversion action against sheriff, lien acquired by levy of execution on judgment is superior to claim of bank under oral understanding with depositor that bank should own business, as such oral agreement amounts to no more than an unfiled mortgage.—First Nat. Bank v. Veglahn, 231 N.W. 601, 57 S.D. 127.

(2) Where judgment creditor caused execution to issue and be levied on automobile in possession of judgment debtor, his lien attached at time of levy and was superior to lien of unregistered mortgage on automobile of which he had no notice at such time, notwithstanding notice at time of execution sale.—Alsbury v. Alsbury, Tex.Civ.App., 211 S.W. 650.

Garnishment liens

Under Remington & B.Code § 3660, declaring unrecorded mortgages void against subsequent creditors, garnishment liens on funds due a judg-

The rule is in most jurisdictions held to apply only to creditors who became such before the mortgage was executed, and where credit was extended to the mortgagor during the time that the mortgage was withheld from record, it has been held that the mortgage is void alike as to creditors with or without liens;⁵⁴ and in some jurisdictions the protection is extended even to creditors whose claims existed prior to the execution of the mortgage.⁵⁵ On the other hand, in some jurisdictions such mortgages are valid against all third parties who have not acquired a lien prior to the recording thereof.⁵⁶ A statute providing that a mortgage shall be void as against the creditors of the mortgagor unless filed does not in itself create a lien in favor of creditors prior to the lien of the mortgage.⁵⁷

The sufficiency of the lien necessary to enable a creditor to attack an unrecorded mortgage depends on the provisions of the recording acts and the proper establishment of the necessary lien.

A statute giving priority to all liens obtained priment debtor are superior to prior unrecorded assignments by said debtor of its future income.—Heermans v. Blakeslee, 161 P. 489, 93 Wash. 595.

Lien acquired by judicial process or otherwise is under Remington & B.Code § 3660, as to recording chattel mortgages, superior to an unrecorded chattel mortgage.—Heermans v. Blakeslee, supra.

Wrongful seizure by creditor will not take the place of the lien required before he can assert the invalidity of the mortgage.—Leopold v. Universal Credit Co., 8 N.E.2d 727, 290 Ill.App. 305.

(1) An unfiled chattel mortgage, there being no change of possession, is void as against all creditors although they have obtained no judgments in their favor and stand in the condition of simple contract creditors. A statute making mortgage not filed and not accompanied by transfer void against creditors of mortgagor is not limited to judgment creditors or creditors armed with process authorizing seizure.—Wagar v. Roaser, 190 N.Y.S. 677, 109 App.Div. 130.—In re Shay's Estate, 285 N.Y.S. 379, 157 Misc. 615.—Rot-

(2) Ordinarily, only judgment creditors can attack mortgage's validity.—Stich v. Pirkel, supra.

(3) A creditor by simple contract, as well as a judgment creditor, is within the protection of the statute; but until he has a judgment and lien or a right to a lien on the specific property he is in no condition to assert his right by action as a creditor.—Wagar v. Roaser, supra.—Halladay v. Worthington, 163 N.Y.S. 362, 99 Misc. 141.—11 C.J. p 516 note 17 [a] (3).

(4) The right to contest an unrecorded mortgage on decedent's household furniture is not possessed by his widow by virtue of her payment of his funeral expenses, as such expenses were never a debt against the husband, and hence the widow in such case is not a judgment creditor or a creditor with a lien especially in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2686, and Decedent Estate Law (Consol.Laws, c. 13) § 176, added by L.1920, c. 919. The widow, therefore, is entitled to have the exempt property set off to her, but subject to the mortgage, for a person in possession of personal property cannot withhold it from a mortgagee, whose mortgage is unrecorded.—Holmes v. Utter, 188 N.Y.S. 83, 196 App.Div. 594.

(5) Execution is lien on car su-or to the recording of the mortgage includes both liens created by contract and arising by operation of law.⁵⁸ Where a general creditor has by attachment and execution fastened his debt on specific property covered by a mortgage, he is entitled to contest the validity of the mortgage;⁵⁹ but an attachment suit by a creditor becoming such prior to the execution of the unrecorded mortgage does not make him a judgment creditor within the protection of the statute.⁶⁰

A creditor who pays off a debt secured by a mortgage on a promise by the debtor to give him a mortgage on the property is not entitled to the property as against an innocent purchaser, having failed to establish an oral mortgage lien.⁶¹

Necessity for lien see supra § 137.

§ 139. — Remedies on Ground of Nullity of Transfer

Creditors may maintain appropriate actions to recover the value or the proceeds of sale of the mortgaged goods where the mortgage is void as to them, or such other actions as the exigencies of the case permit.

Where a mortgage, although recorded, is void because the accompanying affidavit is defective, creditors of the mortgagor may compel the mortgagee to account in equity for the value of the chattels if sold by the mortgagee, or the price received on the sale;⁶² and a judgment creditor's action may be maintained in a proper case to recover the proceeds of sale of property under a mortgage void because not recorded.⁶³

§ 140. — Actions to Determine and Establish Rights

The rights of creditors and mortgagees may be determined by such action or suit as may be appropriate to the particular case.

The rights as between creditors and mortgagees to the property mortgaged or the proceeds thereof may be determined in various actions such as accounting,⁶⁴ garnishment,⁶⁵ trover,⁶⁶ replevin,⁶⁷ suit to try the right of property,⁶⁸ and actions to determine priority of claims, which are considered infra § 130.

A suit for accounting for the value of the chattels or the price at which they were sold by the mortgagee under a mortgage void as to creditors cannot be maintained by a creditor until he has issued execution on his judgment against the mortgagor establishing his claim.⁶⁹

§ 141. — Actions to Set Aside Mortgages

In a proper case an action or suit to cancel an unrecorded mortgage may be maintained.

In a proper case creditors may bring a suit in equity to cancel an unrecorded mortgage, and neither actual notice of the mortgage acquired subsequent to the origin of his debt, nor a failure to show injury as a result of the withholding from record, nor absence of an agreement between the mortgagee and the mortgagor to withhold, nor absence of a fraudulent intent, nor a subsequent recording of the mortgage, will impair the vested right of the creditor to have such mortgage canceled.⁷⁰ In such a suit it is not necessary for plaintiff to allege that he was deceived by the failure to record and that he was induced to act to his injury and that he would not have acted had he known of the mortgage.⁷¹ A purchaser from the trustee for creditors of the mortgagor stands in the shoes of the creditors so far as his right to seek cancellation of the mortgage is concerned.⁷²

(2) To establish that funds in hands of garnishee constituted proceeds of auction sale of property covered by prior mortgage.—Ruble v. Nyseth, supra.

66. Questions for court and jury

(1) In trover by a mortgagee for a mule mortgaged by N to plaintiff, taken by defendant on execution against N and W, when there was evidence supporting defendant's contention that the mule belonged to W and that mortgage was void as against creditors, affirmative charge for plaintiff should not have been given.—Chenault v. Stewart, 73 So. 501, 198 Ala. 288.

(2) In claimant's trover action against a mortgagee and an officer levying execution issued upon affidavit to foreclose and against mortgagee, a directed verdict for defendants is proper where the mortgagee is not in possession and the officer is not liable.—Phillips v. Evans, 165 S.E. 140, 45 Ga.App. 440.

67. Admissibility of evidence

Where the mortgagor of cattle leased them with lands to defendant under agreement that defendant should not only receive compensation for care, but one half of the increase, defendant was a stranger to the mortgage; and, where it had not been properly filed, it is inadmissible in evidence against him in a replevin suit by the mortgagee, and the mortgagee, having taken the cattle, is liable just as if the mortgagor had broken his contract.—Bankers' Trust Co. v. Hudson, 232 S.W. 587, 149 Ark. 472.

Sufficiency of evidence

(1) Testimony that mortgagee of grain under unrecorded mortgage nailed up doors of granaries containing it was sufficient to sustain finding of actual possession by him defeating levy of attachment subsequent to mortgage.—Cummins v. King, 266 S.W. 748, 217 Mo.App. 371.

(2) In replevin against constable, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that possession of farm machinery subject to unrecorded mortgage had not passed to mortgagee at time of levy of attachment.—Cummins v. King, supra.

(3) Evidence held sufficient to show that automobile, seized and sold by defendant, was one on which plaintiff held mortgage.—Roberts v. Robertson, 254 P. 1026, 123 Kan. 222.

68. Burden of proof

When only subsequent creditors are protected by the recording act, the creditor has the burden, in a claim suit to try the right of property to the goods covered by an unrecorded mortgage, of proving he is a subsequent creditor.—Hill v. Rentz, 78 So. 881, 201 Ala. 527.

Sufficiency of evidence

Evidence held insufficient to show foreclosure of a mortgage in a proceeding to try the right to the property covered by the mortgage as between the mortgagee claiming title through the alleged foreclosure and a judgment creditor who levied execution on the property.—Sedlak v. § 142. Necessity as against Purchasers and Encumbrancers

Generally a mortgage, to be valid as against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, must be filed or recorded.

Ordinarily the statutes render it necessary, where possession is retained by the mortgagor, that the mortgage be filed in order to be valid as against subsequent purchasers⁷³ or mortgagees,⁷⁴ and, when the statutes do not expressly include subsequent mortgagees, they are regarded as included by the word "purchasers."⁷⁵

An assignee of a subsequent mortgage has also been regarded as a purchaser,⁷⁶ as have also purchasers on sales under attachment⁷⁷ or execution against the mortgagor,⁷⁸ and officers seizing the property under an attachment.⁷⁹ A mechanic's lienholder has been held not to be a subsequent purchaser.⁸⁰

It has been held that such statutes contemplate only contract purchasers,⁸¹ and hence exclude a wrongdoer or a trespasser on the property against whom a judgment has been recovered for the value of the property, and who has acquired title by operation of law on payment of the judgment.⁸²

The purchase must be from the owner when the mortgage was executed,⁸³ or from some one holding gage as a lien against mortgaged property.—Thesen v. Parker, supra.

under him,⁸⁴ or who has authority from him to sell,⁸⁵ and not from one who has no title to the property.⁸⁶

An antecedent purchaser is not within the protection of recording acts unless expressly included in their terms,⁸⁷ and one who claims to have purchased from the mortgagor cannot be an innocent purchaser where the property was not sold to the mortgagor until after the date of the alleged purchase and the mortgage was recorded on the day of sale to the mortgagor.⁸⁸

Purchaser or mortgagee subject to mortgage. One who acquires his interest under a judgment of foreclosure, providing that the interest shall be sold subject to the lien of a certain mortgage, is not a purchaser in good faith as against such mortgage;⁸⁹ but a second mortgage reciting that it was subject to a first mortgage of a portion of the property does not take precedence over the first mortgage, which was unrecorded, so as to deprive the first mortgagee of any share in the proceeds of sale of the mortgaged property.⁹⁰

Subpurchasers. Failure to record operates equally in favor of immediate purchasers and subpurchasers.⁹¹

Subsequent mortgage not filed. It has been held that an unrecorded mortgage is void as against a subsequent mortgagee in good faith, even though the subsequent mortgage is not filed, and possession is not taken under it.⁹²

§ 143. — Good Faith and Consideration

"Good faith" as used in recording acts has been construed to mean

"without notice."—Lee & Cady v. Farr, 162 N.W. 983, 196 Mich. 492.

"Bona fide purchaser"

(1) A bona fide purchaser must have purchased the property for value in good faith and without notice, either actual or constructive.

(2) To constitute "good faith" of purchaser of mortgaged property, there must be absence of notice of facts calculated to put ordinary business man on inquiry.—Security Trust Co. v. Tuller, 220 N.W. 795, 243 Mich. 570.

Purchaser from vendor after repossession

Where, because conditional sales contracts were not filed in county where autobusses were given a situs, subsequent mortgage executed by buyer vested good title to busses in mortgagee, defendant acquired title from conditional seller subject to lien of mortgage whose validity defendant could not question on ground of lack of acknowledgment, where defendant did not show himself to be good-faith purchaser for value without notice.—Miller Motor Co. v. Jaax, 257 N.W. 653, 193 Minn. 85.

Purchaser under agreement to defend against mortgage

Lawyer who procured bill of sale from mortgagor for purpose of enabling him to defend against the collection of the notes and mortgage, under agreement to share equally with mortgagor whatever he could save out of the property, was not an innocent purchaser, or any kind of purchaser, but was merely the agent and attorney of mortgagor.—Emerson-Brantingham Implement Co. v. Rogers, Mo.App., 216 S.W. 994.

Subsequent encumbrancer in good faith

A good faith mortgagee is one who takes without actual or constructive notice of the prior unrecorded mortgage.

Transactions held bona fide

(1) Contract with tenant of another to purchase sugar beets to be raised was executory contract of sale of crop to be grown, and in view of Gen.St.1923 §§ 8380 and 8450, relating to present sale of future goods, purchaser, after paying large part upon contract in good faith without notice of unfilled lease containing mortgage clause, is protected by § 8345.—Griffin v. Minnesota Sugar Co., 202 N.W. 445, 162 Minn. 240.

(2) Where one purchased an automobile in good faith and received therefor a bill of sale, which he presented to the register of deeds, and received a certificate of title, under L.1919 c 510, taking immediate possession, and where prior thereto the seller gave a bill of sale, without witnesses or acknowledgment to another as security for a debt, which instrument was in fact a mortgage, and the register of deeds issued a certificate of ownership, but the bill of sale was not filed in the manner provided by statute; and the seller valuable consideration.⁹⁴ In some jurisdictions the consideration must have been paid or become a fixed liability,⁹⁵ while in others it is sufficient if the purchaser parts with something of value for the thing purchased.⁹⁶ The giving of a note in payment does not show the payment of a valuable consideration unless the note is negotiable.⁹⁷ It has been held that a mortgagee cannot be regarded as a purchaser, without notice, where the consideration of his mortgage is contaminated by usury.⁹⁸

Preëxisting indebtedness. While there is authority to the contrary,⁹⁹ it is usually held that a preëxisting indebtedness does not constitute a valuable consideration,¹ although an exception has been recognized in some jurisdictions, where an existing debt is paid by the transfer;² but where, in connection with an existing indebtedness, there is a further consideration the purchaser or mortgagee is protected,³ as where there is an extension of the original indebtedness,⁴ or an agreement for future advances.⁵ Further, some courts have held that a mortgage taken to secure a preëxisting debt may be in good faith, within the meaning of a statute, as distinguished from one on a valuable consideration.⁶

Where purchase money has not been paid. In order to entitle a subsequent purchaser to prevail against the mortgagee, he must have paid the purchase money before receiving notice of the unrecorded mortgage;⁷ but where a negotiable note is given by a purchaser having no notice, actual or constructive, of the mortgage, he is a purchaser for value notwithstanding he discovers the existence of the mortgage and a foreclosure judgment thereon before the note has been paid.⁸

Transactions held not bona fide

(1) One who purchased cattle after they had been attached, deposit made to cover a mortgage in compliance with Rev. Codes § 5766, dismissal of suit, and return of cattle, was not an innocent purchaser, although mortgagee wrongfully canceled the mortgage of record, for, to be an "innocent purchaser," a vendee must in good faith pay a valuable consideration without notice of outstanding legal or equitable rights.—Degenhart v. Cartier, 192 P. 259, 58 Mont. 245.

(2) One cannot claim to be a purchaser in good faith by the fact that no encumbrance is of record in the county in which the purchase is made, when he knows that the seller's residence is in another county, from which the car has been brought for the purpose of sale, and in which an encumbrance is duly recorded.—*Stephenville First Nat. § 144. Effect of Change of Possession

Ordinarily recording of a mortgage is not necessary where the mortgaged property is placed in the possession of the mortgagee before rights of other persons have intervened.

Although transfer of possession may, under the terms of a statute providing for recording mortgages, be insufficient to obviate the necessity of recording,⁹ where possession of the mortgaged property is transferred to the mortgagee at the time of the execution of the mortgage, it is not, in the absence of express statutory requirement, necessary that the mortgage be recorded, and the statutes ordinarily provide for recordation as an express alternative to a change of possession,¹⁰ since an immediate and continuous change of possession is the best possible notice of the mortgagee's rights.¹¹ It is not, however, necessary that the mortgagee take possession immediately on execution of the mortgage, as long as he takes possession before his failure so to take results in injury to a third person,¹² and possession taken subsequently to the execution of the mortgage cures any defect in failing to acknowledge and record the instrument as against creditors and third persons who have not acquired enforceable liens by execution or attachment, or by contract prior to the taking of possession;¹³ but a mortgagee cannot defeat the rights of creditors who, prior to his taking possession, secured liens on the property.¹⁴ Change of possession will not avail a mortgagee whose mortgage was not filed, when, prior to his taking possession, a second mortgage was given, even though he takes possession before the second mortgage was filed.¹⁵

Possession must be possession in the capacity of mortgagee, and not in some other capacity, if the requirement of registration is not complied with.¹⁶

The burden of proving a transfer of possession is on the person who claims under the unrecorded mortgage.¹⁷

§ 145. Effect and Sufficiency of Other Notice

Except as otherwise provided by statute, an unrecorded mortgage is binding on all persons having actual notice of it.

The invalidity of an unrecorded mortgage, particularly as to purchasers and encumbrancers, under the usual provisions of the recording acts, arises

After foreclosure but before sale

Where unrecorded mortgage had been foreclosed, but sale thereunder had not been made, mortgagee did not get legal title, but only a lien on property, and title passed to an innocent purchaser from the mortgagor without notice of lien.—Taylor v. Tillotson, supra.

Notice of unenforceable mortgage

Although a mortgage is unenforceable for failure to record the same within the time prescribed by statute, equity will uphold it as against a purchaser of the property with notice of the attempt to create a valid lien, and will regard him a trustee for the mortgagee to the extent of the latter's interest.—Howard v. Statutory provisions construed

(1) "Bona fide purchaser," as used in Chattel Mortgage Law, embraces holder of contract lien such as a chattel mortgage lien.—Lindig v. Johnson City State Bank, Tex.Com. App., 41 S.W.2d 222, reversing, Civ. App., Johnson City State Bank v. Lindig, 26 S.W.2d 658.

(2) Where statute provided that

Under the express wording or the judicial construction of the recording statutes, a mortgage is, in most jurisdictions, valid as against a subsequent purchaser with notice thereof, although it has not been filed or recorded,²¹ and a subsequent mortgagee is ordinarily regarded as standing on the same footing as a subsequent purchaser.²² However, the wording of some recording statutes has been so distinct and the declaration that unrecorded mortgages are void has been put in such unambiguous language that in those jurisdictions a purchaser or subsequent mortgagee is not affected by notice of an unrecorded mortgage,²³ unless an actual intent to unrecorded mortgage should be void as against subsequent encumbrancer in good faith and for value, term "good faith" must be construed according to equity jurisprudence, since foreclosure of mortgage is an equitable proceeding, and hence knowledge precludes "good faith." Where purpose of statute providing that mortgage on motor vehicle was invalid as against subsequent encumbrancer, unless registered, was to furnish constructive notice of mortgage to subsequent encumbrancer, the statute means that mortgage was void when not registered as against subsequent encumbrancer in good faith for value without previous knowledge of prior mortgage and not as to one having knowledge.—Bush v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 37 P.2d 168, 1 Cal.App.2d 538.

(3) The legislature by Comp.L. 1909 § 4422, partly carried into Rev. L.1910 § 4031, and, in view of § 4035, did not intend to make an unfiled mortgage invalid as against a purchaser for value having notice of the mortgage, but used words "purchasers, and incumbrancers . . . for value" in first part of § 4031 in same sense as words "purchaser or incumbrancers . . . in good faith for value" in last part of the section.—Blevins v. W. A. Graham Co., 182 P. 247, 72 Okl. 303.

defraud is shown;²⁴ but it has been held that such parties can by their recognition of the mortgage render it valid as to them.²⁵

Where mortgages were purchased with notice that they were covered by another mortgage, the mortgagee of the covering mortgage was held entitled to surrender of the mortgages so purchased on payment of the price paid for them and to moneys collected thereunder by the purchaser, who was not entitled to the reasonable expense of making such collections.²⁶

Subpurchasers and mortgagees. A subpurchaser without notice of the unrecorded mortgage will take free from such encumbrance, even though his vendor had notice.²⁷ It is also held that a subpurchaser with notice of the unrecorded mortgage will nevertheless take the property free from encumbrance when the vendor,²⁸ execution creditor,²⁹ or attaching creditor,³⁰ through whom he claims, obtained his rights against the property without notice of, or free from, the adverse interests. One who purchases from a second mortgagee with knowledge of a prior unrecorded mortgage and of the claims to preference made by the holders thereof will be postponed to the first mortgage.³¹

§ 147. — On Rights of Creditors

While in some jurisdictions a creditor's knowledge of the existence of an unrecorded mortgage is immaterial, in others such a creditor is postponed to the rights of the mortgagee.

Where, as seen supra § 146, a purchaser is not affected by his knowledge of an unrecorded mortgage, a creditor's knowledge is also immaterial, and to this list must be added jurisdictions which distinguish between purchasers and creditors and make notice material with respect to the former and immaterial as to the latter.³² There remain some jurisdictions, however, where creditors are put on a par with purchasers and are held to be postponed to an unrecorded mortgage of which they had actual knowledge.³³

Rights of purchaser

Where automobile was sold before mortgage thereon was filed to bona fide purchaser, who thereafter sold the automobile after mortgage was filed, the second purchaser took unencumbered title, and was bound to assert such title against mortgagee, and on failure so to do could not recover for breach of warranty against encumbrances, under Rev.Code 1919 § 941.—Kurtz v. Pacific Mercantile Agency Collectors, 279 P. 103, 153 Wash. 37—11 C.J. p 521 note 64.

Attaching creditor

Under Rev.St.1919 § 2256, levy of attachment on property in hands of mortgagor subject to unrecorded chattel mortgage takes precedence over mortgage, even if constable knew of existence thereof prior to levy. Such a mortgage has no effect against attaching creditor unless possession of mortgaged property has been taken by mortgagee before levy of attachment, and fact that constable has actual knowledge of mortgage before levy does not render attachment ineffective.—Cummins v. King, 266 S.W. 748, 217 Mo. App. 371.

Mortgage in other parish

Mortgage is subordinate to lien of mortgagor's judgment creditor acquired by seizure of mortgaged automobile in another parish, before mortgage recordation there, although judgment creditor had actual knowledge of mortgage.—Krivos v. Simons, 134 So. 727, 16 La.App. 421.

Prior creditor

Creditor would not be affected by statute rendering mortgage valid as to one having actual notice thereof if creditors' debt existed before mortgage was executed.—Chelhar v. Acme Garage, 61 P.2d 1232, 18 Cal. App.2d 775—11 C.J. p 521 note 64 [b].

11 C.J. p 522 note 65.

Creditor taking mortgage. When a creditor of the mortgagor, who became such without notice of a prior unrecorded mortgage, which was therefore void as to him, takes a mortgage to secure his claim after learning of the prior mortgage, his notice of the mortgage does not operate to postpone his rights to those of the holder of the prior unrecorded mortgage,³⁴ but it has been held that a creditor who takes a mortgage to secure a preëxisting indebtedness, having knowledge of a prior unrecorded mortgage, is not a creditor within the rule holding creditors unaffected by notice;³⁵ and a general creditor taking a mortgage with notice of a prior unrecorded mortgage, while not losing his rights as creditor, cannot, when relying on his mortgage, attack the prior mortgage.³⁶

§ 148. — What Constitutes Notice

Knowledge of facts sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry may constitute notice of an unrecorded mortgage.

The principles of notice, whether applied to mortgages of real or personal property, are the same.³⁷ A person claiming in competition with a mortgagee will usually be regarded as having notice if he knows facts which would put a prudent man on inquiry, and which, if followed up, would lead to a discovery of the unrecorded mortgage.³⁸ Fail-

Notice in second mortgage taken as security

Although first mortgage covering both realty and chattels was not filed as chattel mortgage, it was not void as to such chattels as against persons extending credit after filing as chattel mortgage of second mortgage expressly providing that second was subordinate to first mortgage and reciting that first mortgage covered both realty and chattels. The trustee under the second mortgage, in such case, cannot by waiving rights to security under second mortgage, which was filed as second mortgage, avoid notice given of chattel provisions of first mortgage.—*Detroit Trust Co. v. Supply Co. v. St. Matthews Financing Co., 15 S.W.2d 502, 228 Ky. 506. 11 C.J. p 522 note 67.

Circumstances held to show notice

(1) Mortgagee, knowing of mortgagor's indebtedness to prior mortgagee of property in county outside the state wherein both mortgages were recorded, had constructive notice of prior mortgage unrecorded in the state.—Brandeis Machinery & Supply Co. v. St. Matthews Financing Co., supra.

(2) Purchasers of second note issue had notice of chattel mortgage provision of realty mortgage, although such mortgage was not filed as chattel mortgage, where the purchaser of the second note issue was affiliated with the parent company who was the mortgagee.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Detroit City Service Co., 247 N.W. 76, 262 Mich. 14.

(3) From recitals in preliminary agreement, purchasers had notice sufficient to put them on inquiry regarding whether trust mortgage covered furniture and furnishings.—Security Trust Co. v. Tuller, 220 N.W. 795, 243 Mich. 570.

(4) Investment bankers who purchased first note issue which appeared simultaneously with first bond issue, also purchased by such brokers, had notice of chattel provisions of realty mortgage securing bonds, although mortgage was not filed as chattel mortgage.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Detroit City Service Co., supra.

(5) Notice in abstracts of title examined by purchasers' attorney bound him to ascertain whether trust mortgage covered furniture and furnishings.—Security Trust Co. v. Tuller, supra.

(6) Second mortgagee taking mortgage which referred to a mortgage other than the prior mortgage given to plaintiff was held guilty of conversion in selling cattle under second mortgage.—United Bank & Trust Co. of California v. Powers, 265 P. 403, 89 Cal.App. 690.

(7) A buyer of a mortgaged piano, who was told by the seller that there was a mortgage in another state on the piano and given the name of the mortgagee, was charged with actual knowledge of the existence of the mortgage, although also told falsely by the seller that the mortgage had been discharged by payment, as he failed to investigate at his peril.—Cable Piano Co. v. Lewis, 243 S.W. 924, 195 Ky. 666. 11 C.J. p 522 note 67 [c].

Circumstances held not to show notice

(1) Circumstances, which may merely arouse suspicion of reasonably prudent person, are generally insufficient to charge party with constructive notice of chattel mortgage.—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Fowler, Tex.Civ.App., 36 S.W.2d 589.

(2) Statement of conditional vendee of automobile to his chattel mortgagee that he had not fully paid for the car, coupled with exhibit of receipt for part payment, did not constitute notice that it was sold under conditional bill of sale.—Auto Mortgage Co. v. Montigny, 168 N.Y.S. 670.

(3) A license registration number on an automobile at the time it is sold is not constructive notice of an encumbrance held by the owner, in whose name the car was registered, regardless of the county or place where the car may be owned or sold, whether within or without the state.—Kurtz v. Adrian, 191 N.W. 188, 46 S.D. 125.

(4) Buyer of automobile, subject to unfilled chattel mortgage executed by person in whose name car was registered at time of purchase by such buyer, was not, by reason of the license number on automobile, chargeable with constructive notice of the mortgage.—Kurtz v. Adrian, supra.

11 C.J. p 522 note 67 [b].

Knowledge of existence of chattel mortgage is sufficient to put person

ure to inquire of the mortgagor as to prior encumbrances must arise from bad faith, and not merely from negligence, in order to charge a person with constructive notice.³⁹

Where a prospective mortgagee, advised of a prior mortgage by the mortgagor, examines the proper records and discovers such prior mortgage does not cover the property on which he proposes to take a mortgage, he need not inquire of the prior mortgagee, and will not be regarded as having notice of an unrecorded mortgage on such property.⁴⁰

Where the original seller, to whom the unrecorded mortgage was given was a corporation, an officer of the corporation is charged with notice of the mortgage and cannot become an innocent purchaser of the mortgaged property;⁴¹ and, where such officer takes a deed of trust from the corporation on its property to secure a debt to him, he is presumed to have actual notice of a prior deed of trust on parts of its property.⁴²

Actual notice of a real estate mortgage does not constitute notice of an equitable chattel mortgage

lien on after-acquired property provided for therein unless there is specific notice of the clause on which the claimed lien is based.⁴³

§ 149. Form of Instrument as Affecting Necessity for Record

The form of the instrument in no wise affects the necessity for recording, and regardless of form any instrument intended to operate as a mortgage comes within the provisions of the recording acts.

Statutes requiring mortgages to be recorded are not affected by the form of the instrument, but they apply not only to instruments which are strictly such in form, but also to other instruments intended to operate as mortgages;⁴⁴ and if an instrument presents a case of security in the nature of a mortgage, then it is to be held, when rights of third parties intervene, to come within the law relating to the recording of such an instrument.⁴⁵ Thus, it has been held necessary to record instruments, such as bills of sale given as security, or conditional sales which are in effect mortgage securities,⁴⁶ or a sale of the property accompanied by a lease back to vendor,⁴⁷ or a lease⁴⁸ or a contract,⁴⁹

Where an owner delivered sheep to J under a cash rent contract, reserving the right to retake possession for default and repay himself from the proceeds in full, the balance, if any, to be paid to J, and the deficiency, if any, to be paid by J, the agreement was one for security for indebtedness, and hence a mortgage, which, not being recorded, was of no force against mortgagees of J.—Clay, Robinson & Co. v. Martinez, 218 P. 903, 74 Colo. 10.

or a receipt⁵⁰ or a trust receipt,⁵¹ or an assignment,⁵² or a note⁵³ intended to operate as a mortgage; and no evasion of the recording act will be tolerated, and the court will look to the real transaction between the parties notwithstanding the terms of the instrument.⁵⁴ An agreement to give a mortgage, in order to be enforceable as an equitable mortgage, it has been held, must be recorded, in case recordation would be essential to the validity of the mortgage when executed in accordance with the agreement.⁵⁵

does not create a lien need not be recorded.⁵⁶ Where an absolute bill of sale is given as security, it is not necessary that the note secured should be recorded as well as the bill of sale.⁵⁷

Schedules or inventories. It follows, from the necessity of a recorded description which sufficiently identifies the property conveyed or affected, that when it is necessary to the identification of the property affected by a mortgage that a schedule or inventory of the chattels, which is referred to in the mortgage, be examined, the schedule must be recorded,⁵⁸ but if the schedule is not necessary to

Sales with retention of title until payment

(1) Vendor's reservation of title to lumber, cut by purchaser of land and timber, until payment of amount due, created a mortgage, which was voidable under North Carolina registration law as against mortgagor's creditors and purchasers from him until registered.—*Elk Creek Lumber Co. v. (2) A contract for sale of store fixtures to a merchant, to be paid for in installments, providing for the giving of notes for deferred payments, and retaining title in the seller "as security for the payment" of such notes, was in effect a mortgage, and, not having been recorded, void as to creditors of the purchaser, under Mich.Comp.L.1915 § 11988.—In re Bonk, D.C.Mich., 268 F. 1012.

(3) Contract whereby seller of silos retains right to retake silos, and whereby buyer agrees that silos are to retain their status as personal property after annexation, may be regarded as in effect a mortgage, which is void as to third parties, where not acknowledged and recorded as required by Chattel Mortgage Act.—Beatrice Creamery Co. v. Sylvester, 179 P. 154, 65 Colo. 569, 13 A. L.R. 441.

Secret lien in absolute sale

Rights of holder of trust receipt

(1) A holder of a trust receipt has no better standing as respects creditors than the holder of an unfiled mortgage, on delivery of the property to the obligor to act as his fiduciary, unless he derives his security title from a person other than the one responsible for the satisfaction of the obligation which the property secures.—*In re A. the identification of the property, it need not be recorded.⁵⁹

Collateral agreements. Although a mortgage is accompanied by a collateral agreement, the latter need not be filed for record where it does not constitute part of the mortgage,⁶⁰ and lack of record of the accompanying agreement has been held not to prevent the court from construing the agreement and the mortgage to be a single contract.⁶¹ However, under a statute permitting a bill of sale to be considered as a mortgage although in terms an absolute conveyance, but requiring the recording of the instrument or writing limiting its character in order that the recording of the bill of sale be effective, consignment agreements executed at the same time as the bill of sale and operating as a defeasance or as an explanation of intention that the bill operate as a mortgage must be filed.⁶²

§ 150. Subject Matter of Mortgage as Affecting Necessity for Record

- a. In general
- b. Choses in action
- c. Mixed mortgages
- d. Crops
- e. Leasehold interests
- f. Fixtures

a. In General

Generally, unless the terms of the particular statute require otherwise, a mortgage need be recorded only when the property mortgaged is capable of manual delivery.

Record or registration under the statutes being ordinarily regarded as a substitute for a change of possession, it is, according to the general rule, necessary only where the property mortgaged is capable of manual delivery.⁶³ Where, however, the statutes do not contemplate a change of possession in any instance, under the mortgage before condition is broken, a requirement that mortgages shall be registered is applicable to mortgages of property not capable of a manual delivery.⁶⁴ Further, distinction has been drawn between the necessity of record under statutes requiring the recordation of mortgages of goods and chattels, and statutes requiring the recordation of mortgages of personal property, it being held that statutes of the latter class cannot be confined to mortgages of tangible property.⁶⁵ The rule that recordation is not required as to mortgages of property not capable of passing by manual delivery has been applied to mortgages of property not in esse,⁶⁶ and to an equitable mortgage of a vested remainder in personality.⁶⁷ Where the statute does not require recording unless the subject matter of the mortgage is of a particular specified kind, failure to record does not affect the lien of the mortgagee on property not of that kind.⁶⁸

Unless required by statute, mortgages of choses in action need not be recorded.

Mortgages of choses in action need not be recorded, according to the generally accepted doctrine, where the recording acts merely require the recordation of mortgages of "goods and chattels."⁶⁹ So, it has been held that a mortgage of corporate stocks, bonds, or other securities,⁷⁰ or of a liquor tax certificate,⁷¹ need not be recorded. Under other statutes, however, recordation of mortgages of choses in action has been held necessary.⁷²

Mortgage to secure payment of bonds

Where a corporation executed a mortgage covering its securities to secure the payment of its corporate bonds, but the mortgage contained no provision that the stocks and bonds covered thereby were to be delivered to the lender on the day the loan was made, the mortgage was not required to be filed under N. Y. Lien L. § 90, as amended by L. 1909, c 38, Consol.L. c 33, which provided that the section providing that the requirement of filing should not apply to mortgage or pledge of, or lien on, stocks or bonds mortgaged or pledged to secure the payment of a loan, which stocks or bonds were to be delivered to the lender on the day such loan was made, and made such mortgage valid as against the creditors, with a provision that, if the securities were not delivered the mortgage should be filed.—Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co., supra.

72. Tenn.—Woodward v. Crump, 32 S.W. 195, 96 Tenn. 369.

11 C.J. p 525 note 92.

c. Mixed Mortgages

A mortgage covering real and personal property must be recorded as a chattel mortgage to give the mortgagee a valid lien on the personality, unless by statute such recording is unnecessary.

While the contrary has been held under the provisions of some statutes,⁷³ as a general rule, where a mortgage covers both real and personal property, it seems to be necessary to record it as a chattel mortgage in order to give the mortgagee a valid lien against a creditor on the personal property included.⁷⁴ However, although failure so to file the mortgage may invalidate it as a chattel mortgage, it does not affect its validity as a lien on the real estate,⁷⁵ and a failure to record the instrument does not affect its validity as between the parties.⁷⁶ It has also been held that an unverified and unrecorded chattel mortgage cannot be rendered valid by an agreement between the parties to treat the property as real estate, where it is not in fact attached to the realty.⁷⁷

d. Crops

Mortgages on crops must be recorded as required by statute.

Where the statute provides for the registration of all mortgages and deeds of trust of personal property, it has been held that mortgages of growing crops are included.⁷⁸ Under the provisions of other statutes, mortgages on growing crops are to be recorded in the manner of mortgages on real estate.⁷⁹

e. Leasehold Interests

Mortgages of leasehold interests are not within the terms of statutes relating to registration of chattel mortgages.

The statutes relating to registration of chattel mortgages apply only to mortgages of personal property and not to mortgages of leasehold interests or of chattels real,⁸⁰ which must ordinarily be registered as mortgages of real estate,⁸¹ for the determination of the place of record depends on the subject matter of the mortgage rather than on the interest of the party in it.⁸²

f. Fixtures

Necessity for recording of mortgages on fixtures depends on the terms of the statute and whether the fixtures have retained their character of personality.

A mortgage of fixtures which retain the character of personality is properly recorded as a chattel mortgage.⁸³ A mortgage of an interest in land and fixtures annexed to such land need not be recorded as a chattel mortgage, and, if so recorded, the record will not be notice to a subsequent purchaser;⁸⁴ but the rule is otherwise where recording as a chattel mortgage is required by statute.⁸⁵

§ 151. Place of Filing or Recording

- a. In general
- b. Character and evidence of residence as controlling
- c. Mortgages by nonresidents
- d. Instruments executed by joint mortgagors

a. In General

Recording must be at the place required by statute, which may be the residence of the mortgagor, or the situs of the property, or both, or either.

A mortgage must be filed or recorded at the place prescribed by statute,⁸⁶ and if the mortgage is recorded in the wrong place the filing is not constructive notice.⁸⁷ Statutes frequently require the mortgage to be filed or recorded within the particular geographical limits such as the town, township, or county, as the case may be, in which the mortgagor resides⁸⁸ at the time of the execution of the instrument,⁸⁹ provided the mortgagor is a resident of the state,⁹⁰ and it is immaterial where the mortgagee resides,⁹¹ where he conducts his business,⁹² or where the mortgaged property is located.⁹³

However, while the mortgagor's place of residence would seem to be the most appropriate place, as conserving the convenience of the greatest number of persons likely to be interested in the property,⁹⁴ under the statutes in some jurisdictions the place for recordation is determined by the situs of the property,⁹⁵ or of the situs of a greater part

False statements as to residence

Where horse dealer sold horse and took notes and mortgage, having it recorded in town in which the purchaser falsely said he resided, record of mortgage was invalid as against bona fide purchaser in such town, and dealer could not retake horse under Rev.St. c 96 § 1, as to recording chattel mortgages.—Martin v. Property to be removed immediately

(1) Where a mortgage of a car describes it as situated in another county than the place where the mortgage is made, and it is understood that it is to be immediately taken there, such other county is the proper place for recording the instrument.—Flora v. Julesburg Motor Co., 193 P. 545, 69 Colo. 238.

(2) Where a resident of Colorado sold a motor truck to a farmer in Nebraska, and the mortgage taken for the purchase price described the chattel as situated in D county, Neb., and it was understood that it was to be immediately taken there, such county was the proper place to record the mortgage.—Flora v. Julesburg Motor Co., 193 P. 545, 69 Colo. 238.

Property in transit

Under a provision that property mortgaged while in transit to the residence of the mortgagor or the place where the property is to be used is, during a reasonable time for trans-

thereof.⁹⁶

Under other statutes record both at the place of the mortgagor's residence and of the situs of the property is required;⁹⁷ under others the recording must be at the place of his residence and where he principally transacts his business;⁹⁸ while under still others it is sufficient to record the mortgage at either place;⁹⁹ and under others it must be recorded where the property is located unless immediately removed to the county of the grantor's residence.¹

Where under the statute the mortgage cannot be properly recorded or filed as to all the property conveyed in a single place, it must be filed or recorded in the additional places indicated or it will be invalid pro tanto.²

A mortgage recorded in the county where the chattels are situated, as required by statute, is valid as to them although not recorded in any other county.³

Where the mortgage shows on its face that it is entitled to record in the county in which it is preportation considered to be in the county of residence or of use, a mortgagee of horses, etc., shipped to a county for use on farm, has constructive notice of plaintiff's prior mortgage, taken when the horses were in a car billed to that county and previously recorded in that county, so that his own mortgage, taken in another county where the horses were temporarily stabled, was inferior.—First Nat. Bank of Canton v. Baldrige, 159 N.W. 130, 37 S.D. 606.

Property to become fixtures

The rights of the holder of a mortgage on an engine and boiler given to secure the purchase price are superior to those of lien claimants charged with notice of the mortgage by filing thereof in the county where the mortgaged property was to be annexed.—Dower Lumber Co. v. Rodewald, 196 N.W. 473, 157 Minn. 314.

Mortgagor's residence not proper place

Mortgage on personalty, permanently located in another county than that of mortgagor's residence, should be recorded in former county.—Beaver Creek Consol. Coal Co. v. Porter Mining Co., D.C.Ky., 60 F.2d 602.

Stipulations

Where at the time an automobile was sold it was known that the purchaser was a resident of W county, and it was stipulated that he was to retain possession of the car in W county, and not to permit it to be removed therefrom, the parties in effect stipulated that the car was delivered in W county, and the situs of the car at the time the mortgage was given should be deemed to be in W county, so that W county was the proper place to file mortgage thereon.—Muller v. Bardshar, 205 P. 845, 119 Wash. 252.

Error in description of location

Where mortgaged chattels were actually in county at time of execution, delivery, and filing of mortgage, that part of such chattels was described as being in another county was immaterial.—State Bank of Wheatland v. Bagley Bros., 11 P.2d 572, 44 Wyo. 244, rehearing denied 13 P.2d 564, 44 Wyo. 456.

Mistake as to situs

Under Code 1906, §§ 2785, 2787, Hemingway Code §§ 2289, 2291, requiring mortgages and deeds of trust on personal property to be recorded in the county in which the property may remain, a deed of trust to secure purchase price of property which was immediately carried to, and thereafter remained in, the county in which purchaser resided, was not constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration unless recorded in such county, although recorded in county of seller's residence, and although seller did not know buyer was a resident of such other county.—McLarty v. Ashmore, 91 So. 421, 128 Miss. 735.

Effect of change of statute

A statute repealing a provision for recording in the county where the mortgagor resides and substituting a provision requiring a mortgage to be filed in the county where the property was situated does not impair the validity of a mortgage previously filed, in accordance with the law then in force, in the county where the mortgagor resided.—*Ches-ter State Bank v. Property removed to county of residence

Where a mule, purchased in Thomas county, upon which a mortgage was thereupon executed, was taken by the buyer to Grady county, where he resided, and where the mule was thereafter kept, the recording of the mortgage in Grady county was notice to a subsequent mortgagee, notwithstanding Civ.Code 1910 §

3259, relative to recording the mortgage in the county in which the property is located when the mortgage is executed and in the county where the mortgagor resides.—Grady Trading Co. v. Ireland, 114 S.E. 86, 29 Ga.App. 172.

Construction of statute

(1) Words "principally transacts his business" in a statute requiring that a mortgage be recorded on records of town where mortgagor resides and principally transacts his business when mortgage is made do not include "trade, calling, regular occupation, work and employment" as used in earlier statutes but omitted in the statute under consideration.—Bankers of Massachusetts v. Reid, Murdoch & Co., Mass., 8 N. E.2d 19.

(2) In Gen.L.Mass. c 255 § 1, requiring mortgages to be recorded in the town where the mortgagor resides when the mortgage is made and also in the town where he then principally transacts his business, the word "resides" means the place of his permanent abode, and not the place where he may be temporarily living. A chattel mortgage made by a bankrupt, whose place of business and permanent residence was in Boston, where the mortgage was recorded, held not invalid, under the law of Massachusetts, because it was not also recorded in the town where bankrupt was living temporarily when it was made.—Petition of Mc-Lauchlan, C.C.A.Mass., 1 F.2d 5.

sented for record, the recorder of that county has no alternative but to record.⁴

b. Character and Evidence of Residence as Controlling

Where recording is required at the place where the mortgagor resides, the usual rules for determination of residence are applicable.

Where the statute requires that a mortgage of chattels shall be recorded at the place where the mortgagor resides, the question involved is not one of domicile but of residence,⁵ which is largely a question of intention.⁶ Residence means something more than a mere presence in a place, particularly where the mortgagor has at the same time a permanent place of abode in another locality.⁷ A mere temporary or casual absence on business or pleasure will not render the person a nonresident.⁸ The fact of actual residence is to be determined by the ordinary and obvious indicia of residence.⁹

Effect of recitals. Although recitals in the instrument as to residence have been held to be sufficient to make out a prima facie case,¹⁰ the better rule is that such recitals are to be disregarded,¹¹ and do not preclude third persons from showing that such place was not in fact the residence of the mortgagor.¹²

Burden of proof. Where the mortgagor's residence controls as to the proper place of record, one claiming under the mortgage must establish that the mortgagor's residence was such as to render the filing proper.¹³

Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence. As bearing on the question of residence, the contemporaneous acts of the parties showing their intention are admissible.¹⁴ Evidence that the mortgagor left his family and permanent abode and went to another county is insufficient to show his residence in the latter county so as to make recording there proper.¹⁵

c. Mortgages by Nonresidents

In general a mortgage on property in a state other than that in which the mortgagor resides must be recorded at the situs of the property.

Nonresidents of the state have been denied the advantages of provisions in recording statutes and compelled to rely on a change of possession,¹⁶ but by statute, in many jurisdictions, in the absence of the mortgagor from the state, the mortgage is to be recorded where the mortgaged property is located,¹⁷ at the time of the execution and delivery of the mortgage.¹⁸ Where the mortgagor is a nonresident and the mortgaged property is not within the state, although described in the mortgage as being so located, the recording of the mortgage in the state is not valid as to third persons.¹⁹

Mortgages by joint mortgagors must ordinarily be recorded at the place of residence of each of them, where residence of the mortgagor determines the place of recording.

In those jurisdictions in which the place of record is determined by the residence of the mortgagor, an instrument executed by several persons residing in different counties or towns must be recorded in each place in which such persons reside;²⁰

and if some of them are nonresidents and some residents, then in the places where the residents reside.²¹

A chattel mortgage given by a partnership, the partners residing in different places, must be filed in each recording district in which any one of the partners resides,²² unless some of them are nonresidents of the state.²³

§ 152. — Recording Districts

Recording must be made within the proper recording district.

Ordinarily, recording districts are determined by county, town, or township lines, and there is no difficulty in determining their exact boundaries,²⁴ and, if these geographical divisions are not observed in recording the mortgage, its recordation is of no effect as to third persons.²⁵ If the mortgage is deposited for record in the office of the recorder of the district in which the property is located at the time, a subsequent change of the boundary of the recording district will not affect the validity of the prior recordation.²⁶

§ 153. — Unorganized Counties

Where unorganized localities or counties are joined to others for recording purposes, a mortgage executed in the unorganized place must be recorded as required; but where not so joined possession must be taken by the mortgagee.

In many jurisdictions unorganized places or counties are joined to others for registration purposes, and such provisions have been upheld,²⁷ but if not so joined the mortgagee must take possession to be protected against the claims of third persons.²⁸ If the statute applies in terms to real estate mortgages, it will not be extended by implication to chattel mortgages.²⁹

§ 154. — Effect of Removal of Mortgagor

Removal of the mortgagor from the district where he resided and the mortgage was recorded does not invalidate the recording; nor will his removal to the place where the mortgage was improperly recorded validate the recording.

The removal of the mortgagor from the district in which he resided when the mortgage was executed and where it was duly recorded, and the taking of the mortgaged property with him, do not invalidate the record of the mortgage or necessitate the recording of it in the district to which he has removed,³⁰ except where recording in the new locality may be required because of the removal of the property thereto, as stated infra § 155. Where the mortgagor after the execution and before the recording of a mortgage removes to another county, the latter county is the proper place of record.³¹ If the mortgage has been recorded in a town where the mortgagor does not reside, his subsequent removal to such town will not validate the mortgage as to third persons.³²

Ordinarily, by statute, where goods are removed from the place where the mortgage is recorded the mortgage must be recorded in the place to which the goods are removed.

Where the situs of the mortgaged property is made a controlling element with reference to the place of filing or registration, as discussed supra § 151, the situs intended is that existing at the time when the instrument is executed, and not where it may thereafter be removed.³³ In the absence of any specific statutory provision regarding the removal of mortgaged property, the record of a mortgage in the town or county where it is required to be originally filed for record is held to be constructive notice to all the world, and the mortgage is valid without refileing even though the property may be removed to another town or county.³⁴

or even to another state, as shown supra § 15. However, by statute it is ordinarily required that if the mortgaged property is removed to another county the mortgage must be refiled or recorded anew in the county to which it is removed, otherwise it is ineffectual as against creditors and innocent purchasers of the property in the latter county.³⁵

ing of mortgages in the county into which the mortgaged property is removed allow the mortgagee a certain time within which to so file or record his mortgage after removal of the goods, and failure to do so within the prescribed time renders the mortgage unprotected in such county;³⁶ but until such time has expired the filing of the mortgage operates as constructive notice to subsequent creditors, purchasers or encumbrancers in such county,³⁷ and

De Tweede Northwestern & Pacific Hypotheekbank*, C.C.A.Idaho, 69 F.2d 418.

Filing not notice outside parish

Statutory requirements of mortgage as to third persons without notice refers to third persons in parish where property is located or where mortgagor resides and not in a parish to which the property is removed.—Krivos v. Simmons, 134 So. 727, 16 La.App. 421.

Filing of duplicate original chattel mortgage in county to which property was removed and indexing of same was sufficient to continue lien.—In re Neil, D.C.Wash., 44 F.2d 666.

Permanent location

Where chattels mortgaged in one county were removed by mortgagor to another county and there used in his business for more than one hundred twenty days, they were "permanently located" in latter county within Rev.L.1910 § 4032, requiring refiling of mortgage in county where mortgaged property is permanently located.—First Nat. Bank v. Guess, 179 P. 29, 72 Okl. 125.

Temporary removal

Lien of mortgage was not lost by temporary removal for pastureage purposes of mortgaged cattle from one county into another.—Evans v. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Oklahoma City, C.C.A.Tex., 49 F.2d 125.

Time of purchase

(1) Under a provision invalidating a mortgage lien where property is removed to another county unless the mortgagee within thirty days re-records the mortgage, the lien of the mortgage is lost when the mortgage was not filed within the thirty-day period, although the purchase was within the thirty-day period.—Muller v. Bardshar, 205 P. 845, 119 Wash. 252.

(2) One appropriating property covered by mortgage within thirty days after removal from county was guilty of conversion.—Pacific Fruit Exchange v. F. E. Booth Co., 283 P. 944, 103 Cal.App. 54.

Return to first county immaterial

A mortgage is void against third party where automobile remained without county where mortgaged over thirty days, although being repaired and thereafter returned.—Kahrman v. Fitzgerald, 259 P. 90, 85 Cal.App. 180.

Prior creditors

Where mortgage is properly filed in county where mortgaged property was located at time mortgage was made, and thereafter property is permanently removed to another county with mortgagee's consent, mortgage need not be refiled in county to which property is removed to preserve its validity as against creditors whose claims arose prior to execution of mortgage.—Burkdoll v. Simpson, 48 P.2d 1072, 173 Okl. 397, 103 A.L.R. 195.

Effect on other rights

Where mortgaged sheep were removed from county and converted within thirty days after removal, mortgagee, although he could not sustain mortgage lien without filing copy of mortgage in county to which sheep were removed, was not required to file such copy to recover for conversion.—Schneller v. Vincent, 229 P. 737, 131 Wash. 238, affirmed 237 P. 1119, 135 Wash. 698.

Removal to third county

Under Code 1907 § 3376, requiring mortgage to be recorded in county to which mortgaged property is removed within three months from removal, where property remained in county to which it was removed for five months without recording it therein, and was thereafter removed to a third county, and sold to purchaser for value and without actual notice within a month after removal, without reporting it in third county, original recordation was insufficient constructive notice, having lost its effect in second county.—Howe v. Simison, 81 So. 837, 17 Ala.App. 59.

Time of removal controls

Under Rev.St.1911 art 6841, where mortgage on mules was given to the sellers thereof by the buyers, and the mules were moved to Louisiana, where the lien of the mortgage was recorded, the sellers' liens become inferior to the liens of a bank, acquired after the mules were brought back into another county of Texas and recorded there before the sellers' mortgage was recorded, the recording of the mortgage by the sellers in the county into which the mules were brought back not having been within four months after the removal of the mules from another county where the lien was first recorded, into Louisiana on the original sale.—*Hart Bros. v. a purchaser before the expiration of the time limit does not become a purchaser in good faith because of the failure of the mortgagee to file in such county thereafter.³⁸

Statutes regulating the filing of mortgages in other counties to which the property may be removed apply the same test of good faith and valuable consideration to creditors,³⁹ subsequent purchasers,⁴⁰ and mortgagees,⁴¹ in such counties as in the original county.

Statutes requiring a refiling after removal apply only to cases where the removal was made with the consent of the mortgagee; the mortgage need not be refiled where the property was removed without the mortgagee's consent,⁴² although the contrary has been held.⁴³ Where the mortgagee has consented to the removal of the mortgaged property to another state, or county, his subsequent filing of the mortgage in the county of the original situs of the property is ineffective.⁴⁴ Due registration after the removal of the property renders the mortgage effectual against subsequent purchasers and creditors, although there was no registry in the county where the property was when the mortgage was executed.⁴⁵

Under a statute requiring filing in the county where the property is located unless immediately removed to the county of the grantor's residence, failure to remove immediately will destroy the effect of the record in the latter county as constructive notice.⁴⁶

§ 156. Time of Filing or Recording

Where no time for filing or recording after execution is prescribed by the statute, a reasonable time is allowed; but statutory prescriptions as to time must be complied with.

A mortgage must, according to the general trend of the authorities, be filed or recorded within a reasonable time after execution, where the statute requiring such thing or recordation is silent as to the time therefor.⁴⁷ However, where a statute provides that a mortgage must be filed or recorded within a specified number of days after its execution, compliance with the statute is essential,⁴⁸ and

Effect of knowledge

(1) A statute making chattel mortgages void against bona fide creditors, etc., where mortgagee permits property to be removed to another county and fails to record the mortgage there within four months, is inapplicable to property removed without mortgagee's consent, but with his knowledge.—Guaranty State Bank of Tyler v. Reeves, Tex.Civ. App., 213 S.W. 285, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

(2) Where chattel mortgagee's agent knew that mortgagor had removed mortgaged horses from county, but made no effort to place mortgage in registry of county of removal, or to take possession, after sleeping on rights for three years mortgagee cannot claim rights over subsequent mortgagee.—Haslet State Bank v. Existing statute governs

Rights of mortgagee, filing mortgage too late, are governed by existing statute, whether or not repeal of earlier statute revived common law rule.—In re Myers, C.C.A.N.Y., 24 F.2d 349, modifying, D.C., 19 F. 2d 600.

After debt due

Where the statute does not prescribe the time for filing, a mortgage ordinarily may be recorded after debt secured is due, although it would not be valid as against subsequent purchasers for value without notice or creditors who had obtained liens before recordation.—Southern Bank & Trust Co. v. Mathers, 106 So. 402, 90 Fla. 542.

Purchase before expiration

Where a specified number of days is provided by statute for the recording of the mortgage after its execution, the mortgagee may recover the property from a purchaser

if the time has expired the redating and reacknowledging of the mortgage without again swearing to the affidavit of good faith required by the statute for valid execution is not such execution that filing within the statutory time thereafter will amount to compliance with the statute.⁴⁹

Under statutes requiring that recordation shall be "forthwith," or "immediate," it has been held that the mortgage must be filed as soon as it can be with reasonable diligence and exertion,⁵⁰ and if not so filed is void as against creditors and subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers in good faith⁵¹ although valid as between the parties to it.⁵²

In accordance with well-settled general principles, the question as to what is a reasonable time depends on the circumstances of the particular case.⁵³ Where a certain number of days is given in which to record a mortgage, the period begins to who bought the property after execution of the mortgage but before it was recorded.—Hillgoss v. Thorpe, 141 N.E. 797, 80 Ind.App. 614.

- c. Agreements to withhold from record

a. In General

Delay in filing or recording will not, in the absence of statute, render the mortgage void, but the rights of the mortgagee will be postponed to those of third persons accruing between the time of execution and the recording.

The mere withholding of a mortgage from record does not invalidate it,⁶⁰ and it cannot be attacked on this ground by one who has acquired no rights or interest during the period between execution and recordation,⁶¹ or who knew of the existence of the mortgage even though not filed,⁶² although it is postponed to intervening rights of purchasers⁶³ or creditors,⁶⁴ and as soon as the filing is completed

Execution of new note immaterial

Invalidity of mortgages withheld from record continued to inhere therein as regarded creditors, regardless of execution of new note.—Hodiamont Bank v. Livingstone, C. C.A.Mo., 35 F.2d 18.

In contest for distribution of fund between recorded general execution superior to subsequently recorded bill of sale to secure debt, but inferior to lien of prior unrecorded general execution, junior recorded execution is entitled to first priority, bill of sale to second, and senior unrecorded general execution to balance thereof.—Merchants' & Mechan-ics' Bank v. Beard, 134 S.E. 107, 162 Ga. 446, answers to certified ques-tions conformed to 134 S.E. 479, 35 Ga.App. 692.

the general rule is that the mortgage becomes valid and operative against general creditors of the mortgagor whose claims antedate the execution of the mortgage.⁶⁵ A fortiori, late filing has this effect where the claim arose subsequently to the registration of the instrument.⁶⁶ Where a statute declares a mortgage to be void as to subsequent purchasers in good faith when not filed within the time prescribed, a mortgage filed after expiration of the time allowed is void as to a purchaser in good faith although it was filed before the purchase, but the belated filing may carry actual notice to a subsequent purchaser, so as to take him out of the protection of the good faith clause of the statute.⁶⁷ In some jurisdictions, however, a mortgage made in good faith is valid against all parties who, previous to date of day of record, have not acquired lien by attachment, levy, or some such proceeding, even though there is a delay in having the mortgage recorded.⁶⁸

Where a mortgagee records his mortgage within a reasonable time after execution, the statute fixing no specific time for recordation, it is not void as to creditors of the mortgagor becoming such between the time of the execution of the mortgage and the time of its recordation,⁶⁹ or when no adverse rights are acquired nor prejudice suffered during the interval between its execution and recordation.⁷⁰

A mortgage executed after a prior mortgage has been filed may prevail as against such mortgage where the subsequent mortgage is taken for a debt contracted while the prior mortgage remained unfilled.⁷¹ As between two mortgages, neither of which has been recorded within the time required by statute, the one under which possession is first taken and retained will prevail.⁷²

Where a mortgage is delivered to a third party, to be delivered to the mortgagee at a future day if the debt secured is not sooner paid, and nothing remains to be done by the mortgagee to entitle him to the mortgage, the doctrine of delivery in escrow cannot be invoked to uphold it against creditors as against a contention of delay in filing.⁷³

Subsequent mortgage

That mortgage executed on Saturday, June 9, 1934, was not filed until June 12, 1934, was held not an unreasonable delay as matter of law, and hence, such mortgage prevailed over subsequent mortgage, where otherwise valid.—Schutzbank v. Colonial Discount Co., 289 N.Y.S. 33, 248 App.Div. 328.

Reason other than extension of credit Withholding from record for reasons other than acquisition of credit was not fraud as against sub-

so provided by statute, withholding from record raises a presumption of fraud which must be rebutted.⁷⁵

c. Agreements to Withhold from Record

Agreements to withhold a mortgage from record will invalidate the mortgage as to those who extend credit to the mortgagor as a result of the concealment of the mortgage.

The withholding of a mortgage from record, by an agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, for the purpose of sustaining the mortgagor's credit, is generally held to be such a fraud on the creditors of the mortgagor as will invalidate the mortgage as to them.⁷⁶ In some jurisdictions, however, this rule is extended only to those creditors who became such during the period when the mortgage was withheld from record,⁷⁷ or to prior creditors who have dealt with the mortgagor, after its execution, in a manner other than they would have dealt had the mortgage been recorded.⁷⁸ Even under a statute requiring record as between the parties, agreements to withhold from record for a limited time not unreasonably long have been held to be valid as between the parties.⁷⁹

A mortgagee who agrees to the withholding of the mortgage from record to enable the mortgagor to obtain a lease cannot defeat the lessor's lien on the mortgaged property on the ground that the delay was the result of fraud and coercion, although the lessor refused to make the lease unless the recording was delayed.⁸⁰

§ 158. — Relation Back

Filing or recording may in a proper case relate back to the time of execution of the mortgage.

While the contrary has been held under the provisions of some statutes,⁸¹ as a general rule, where there has been compliance with the requirement of a statute, either that a mortgage should be filed "forthwith," "within a reasonable time," or within a specified time, the filing relates back to the time the instrument was executed and cuts out intermediate claimants.⁸²

§ 159. Sufficiency of Filing or Recording

To be a valid filing or recording, the statutory requirements must be complied with; but, generally, when the mortgagee has done all that is required of him, the mortgage is regarded as validly filed or recorded although, in fact, error or mistake has been committed by the recording officer.

In general, to constitute a valid filing or record of a mortgage, there must be a compliance with the statutory requirements, as a provision that the mortgage shall be inoperative until recorded means recorded as required by statute.⁸³ Thus, it is necessary to comply with the requirements as to the officer with whom the instrument is to be depositsequent creditors.—Baxter v. Baxter, 217 N.W. 231, 204 Iowa 1321.

Presentation to officer and immediate withdrawal

A mere presentation to the county clerk of an original mortgage and the immediate withdrawal of it without recording or leaving a copy in its stead cannot be a filing within L. 1915 c 71, as amended by L. 1917 cc 36, 74, requiring the clerk to retain the mortgage or the copy, even though the clerk puts his file mark on it, to "file" an instrument being to present it to the proper officer to be kept as an archive of his office.—Nations v. Lowenstern, 204 P. 60, 27 N.M. 613.

Recording mortgage, without filing or minuting, is sufficient constructive notice thereof, under a statute providing for recording as an alternative to filing.—Spurgeon v. Hughes, 258 P. 350, 32 N.M. 436.

Deposit with officer insufficient

Where the statutory requirements have not been complied with, the mere deposit of the mortgage with the recording officer does not operate as a recording, and the mortgage will become effective only on actual registration following the subsequent compliance with the statute.—*Eckhardt v. Delivery to the register of deeds outside his office is not a filing, and becomes such only when the register carries it within his office and makes a record thereof.—McHan v. Dorsey, 92 S.E. 598, 173 N.C. 694.

In Michigan

(1) Under a statute requiring mortgages to be filed in the office of the township clerk of township, or city clerk of city, where goods are located, and, if of a stock of merchandise, then "also" in the office of the register of deeds of county where goods are located, the filing of a mortgage in the office of the register of deeds, who had the affidavit required by such statute attached thereto, did not cure the illegal filing in the office of the city clerk of an instrument without such affidavit, since the mortgage, to comply with such statute, was required to be filed in both the office of the city clerk and that of the register of deeds.—In re Jarnol, D.C.Mich., 283 F. 547.

(2) Mortgage on stock of drugs and trade fixtures, filed with city clerk but not with register of deeds, is valid as to trade fixtures only, but the partial invalidity because of defective filing does not affect valid portions.—McKerregan v. Alpena Nat. Bank, 220 N.W. 671, 243 Mich. 481.

(3) As to fixtures not purchased for resale at retail, in mortgage covering stock and fixtures, filing of mortgage with township clerk was sufficient, although if purchased for such purpose it also would have been necessary to file the mortgage in the office of the register of deeds of the county where the goods were located.—Cudahy Bros. Co. v. John W. Free State Bank, 221 N.W. 621, 244 Mich. 523.

(4) Where a sales agreement for wagons retained in seller the right to require payment at any time, being for security and intended to operate as a mortgage, it is governed as to filing by Comp.L.1915 § 11988, requiring a mortgage or copy thereof to be filed with both the township clerk and the register of deeds.—Peter Schuttler Co. v. Gunther, 192 N.W. 661, 222 Mich. 430.

Fee payable in advance

Under a statute providing that no mortgage on a motor vehicle shall be valid until the mortgagee is registered as the legal owner, and a provision that transfer of registration will be made only on payment of the correct fee, fees for transfer of registration of automobiles must be paid in advance, and prior thereto chattel mortgage on automobile need not be registered.—Eckhardt v. Morley, 30 P.2d 423, 220 Cal. 229.

87. U.S.—Union Stockyards Bank of Wichita, Kan. v. Hamilton, Ky., 246 F. 580, 153 C.C.A. 550. 11 C.J. p 535 note 4.

True copy

(1) A statute providing that a copy of a mortgage may be filed instead of the original, contemplates a true copy, a "copy" of an instrument being a duplication or reproduction of it.—Nations v. Lowenstein, 204 P. 60, 27 N.M. 613.

(2) Carbon copy, exact duplicate of original, except that maker's signature was omitted, is a "true copy" within filing statute, and not misleading to other mortgagee knowing facts of transaction.—Harrington v. Interstate Securities Co., Mo.App., 57 S.W.2d 438.

Authenticated copy

To be an authenticated copy, as required by the Oklahoma statute, the copy filed in county in which part of mortgaged property is located, must be duly certified by county clerk, and original mortgage must be lawfully on file with clerk, when such certificate is made, and withdrawal is permissible only when mortgage is to be canceled as provided by the statute. Where county clerk, at mortgagee's request, or with his knowledge and consent, fails to file original chattel mortgage when presented to him, but returns it to mortgagee, and in lieu thereof files an unauthenticated copy, the error is one of mortgagee as well as clerk, and the filing is a nullity.—New Era Milling Co. v. Thompson, 230 P. 486, 107 Okl. 114.

Duplicate originals

Where mortgaged cattle are in two counties, and where duplicate original mortgages are filed in both counties, each mortgage so filed being original, filing thereof is valid.—Bridges v. Union Cattle Loan Co., 229 P. 805, 104 Okl. 74.

Indorsement of instructions on mortgage

(1) Under the provisions of the Arkansas statute, a mortgage to create and maintain a lien good as against strangers must either be filed with clerk for record or bear indorsement directing filing signed by mortgagee, his agent or attorney.—Continental Supply Co. v. Thomas, supra.

(2) There must be some indorsement upon a mortgage by the mortgagee, either written or printed, intended as his signature, following the notation that the instrument is to be filed but not recorded, in order to constitute it a lien as against a third party without being recorded.—Gasconade Development Co. v. McIlroy Bank & Trust Co., Ark., 112 S.W.2d 653.

(3) Mortgagee's signature above printed indorsement of words, "this instrument is to be filed but not recorded," with line drawn from such signature to dotted line under indorsement, was substantial compliance with statute.—Reitz v. Nowlin, Ark., 110 S.W.2d 690.

(4) The printing of the firm name of mortgagee on the back of the mortgage, under an indorsement, "This instrument is to be filed but not recorded," is a signature within the statute.—Lesser-Goldman Cotton Co. v. Hembree, 259 S.W. 5, 163 Ark. 88.—Leach v. Bald Knob State Bank, 259 S.W. 3, 163 Ark. 91.

(5) Where indorsement was not followed by the signature of the mortgagee either written or printed, and the name of mortgagee appeared only once in the caption of the mortgage showing the parties, the mortgage was not properly indorsed to comply with the statute and constitute it a lien as against a third party.—Gasconade Development Co. v. McIlroy Bank & Trust Co., supra.

(6) Transmission to circuit clerk of mortgage with letter requesting same to be filed is not an indorsement on the instrument by mortgagee that it should be filed.—Continental Supply Co. v. Thomas, 197 S.W. 683, 130 Ark. 287. 11 C.J. p 535 note 5 [a].

ly recorded without further instructions, the record is unauthorized and void, unless ratified before other claims attach.⁹⁰

When the mortgagee has complied with the statute, so far as lies within his power, the mortgage is regarded as filed or recorded from the time it was so deposited;⁹¹ and the mortgagee is not affected by the errors or omissions of the recording officer.⁹² So, where the statute provides for an actual transcription of the mortgage on the records, the mortgagee, under the general rule, is not affected by the failure of the officer so to transcribe.⁹³ Further, independently of the rule of nonliability of the mortgagee for errors and omissions of the recording officer, and even in those jurisdictions where the rule is disapproved, such errors and omissions are generally held not to invalidate the mortgage as against third persons if the record is sufficient to give them notice,⁹⁴ or if they have actual knowledge of the existence of the mortgage.⁹⁵ A chattel mortgage in the form of a conveyance, recorded in the record of deeds, instead of as a chattel mortgage, has been held void as against creditors.⁹⁶

Although the recording is defective, the rights of the mortgagee cannot be defeated by a third person asserting a fictitious claim against the mortgagor.⁹⁷

Transcription as filing. Where transcription is required, a mortgage will be effective as to third persons only when actually inscribed,⁹⁸ and when timely inscribed will be effective from the time of its filing.⁹⁹ The transcription of the instrument in extenso on the records in those jurisdictions where such transcription is not necessary has been held a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring the instrument, or a copy thereof, to be deposited with the recorder, to be kept in his office for inspection.¹ Where transcription is required, it has been held that the fact that it is in the handwriting of the mortgagor does not affect the validity of the registration.²

Mixed mortgages. Under the recording acts in some jurisdictions mortgages embracing both land and chattels may be recorded in the books kept for

Erroneous date

Recorder's mistake in writing date instead of due date of note in recording mortgage does not affect the validity of the mortgage.—Eaton State Bank v. Flesher, 243 Ill.App. 532.

Omission of marginal note

Where a mortgage bore a marginal notation that the name of intervenor should be substituted wherever the name of the mortgagee appeared in the mortgage and the clerk in recording it omitted the marginal entry, the record of the mortgage was nevertheless sufficient to put all persons on inquiry.—Palmer v. Mergenthaler Linotype Co., supra.

In Louisiana, it being regarded as the duty of the mortgagee to see that his mortgage is properly registered, a mortgage, not filed, but recorded by the clerk, so as not to give real mortgagor's name as required by the statute, does not operate as lien.—Charrier v. Greenlaw Truck & Tractor Co., 2 La.App. 622.

Construction of statute

Where a constitutional provision requires recording, actual inscription in the record is necessary, and a statute, if construed to permit mortgages to affect third persons' property before being recorded in parish where property is situated, would be unconstitutional. — Whitney-Central Nat. real estate records, and this is held to constitute a sufficient record of the instrument as a chattel mortgage, notwithstanding the statute requires mortgages of chattels alone to be separately recorded in a book kept exclusively for chattel records;³ but in most jurisdictions in which separate books are designated for mortgages of land and for chattel mortgages, it is held that the record of a mixed mortgage in the real estate mortgage book alone will not suffice.⁴

Mortgage of written contract. When the mortgage of a written contract is deposited for record it has been held that the contract must be deposited with the mortgage.⁵

Where mortgage is withdrawn in order to perfect its attestation, a return of the instrument to the clerk's office has been held to constitute a "filing" for record.⁶

Affidavit and jurat. When the statute requires an affidavit by the parties to the mortgage, together with the certificate of the oath signed by the officer administering it, to be appended to the mortgage and recorded therewith, the papers constitute one instrument for record, and if the affidavit and certificate are omitted from the record the mortgage is not legally recorded.⁷

§ 160. — Defects in Copy Filed

Where a true copy of the mortgage is required to be filed, a substantially true copy will suffice.

The purpose of the statutes in requiring a true copy of the mortgage to be filed being to give notice to creditors and holders of after-acquired interests, a copy which apprises them of the existence of the mortgage, the property mortgaged, and the material terms and conditions of the instrument, substantially complies with the law, notwithstanding clerical errors.⁸ However, a copy which shows no signature or acknowledgment is insufficient, and an unauthorized certificate of the clerk that it is a true copy will not aid an incomplete copy.⁹

§ 161. — Recording in Wrong Book

Recording of mortgage in the wrong book has been held not to make the recording invalid, but there is authority to the contrary.

Failure to record a mortgage in the book designated by statute for that purpose has been held not to affect the validity of the record;¹⁰ but the authorities are not in entire accord on this point, and in some jurisdictions where the books for recording instruments affecting chattels are kept separate and distinct from the records relating to real estate or other transactions, a chattel mortgage not recorded in the book kept exclusively for that purpose is held to be invalid as to third persons.¹¹ When the failure to record in the proper book is the fault of the mortgagee, his lien is void as against third persons.¹²

Except as required by statute the mortgage need not be indexed; and generally failure to index it, or defectively indexing it, does not affect the validity of the filing or recording, even where the officer is required by statute to index.

In the absence of a statute requiring it the recording officer need not index a mortgage;¹³ and where the statute does impose on the officer the duty of making an index, it is generally held that it is not a part of the "filing," and that the mortgage will constitute notice, although the officer fails to index it, or indexes it in a defective manner.¹⁴ On the other hand, the index does not constitute notice when the mortgage or copy thereof by reason of defects is not entitled to be filed.¹⁵ A provision for indexing has been held sufficiently complied with when the mortgage has been indexed and cross-indexed in the front of the chattel mortgage book.¹⁶

When a real estate mortgage providing for a lien on rents is given on land lying in two counties, indexing it in one county as a chattel mortgage creates a lien on the land in that county as to the rents therefrom, although not on the land outside that county.¹⁷

§ 163. Operation and Effect of Filing or Recording

The effect of recording is generally the same whether the mortgagee is a resident or nonresident; and an invalid mortgage is not validated by recording.

The recordation of the mortgage will not validate it if it is otherwise invalid.¹⁸ Ordinarily, the statutes make no distinction between resident and nonresident mortgagees as to the effect of record.¹⁹ The mere fact that a mortgage has been filed does not necessarily import that the mortgagee has actual knowledge thereof, or has any interest in the property on which the mortgage is alleged to create a lien.²⁰ A buyer of personalty subject to a mortgage of which he has constructive notice takes whatever title he may acquire in hostility to mortgagee, and does not become "purchaser in good faith for value" as against such mortgage.²¹

§ 164. — Record of Mortgage as Notice

- a. In general
- b. Persons affected by notice
- c. Instruments affording notice
- d. Crop mortgages

a. In General

In general the recording of a mortgage operates to give constructive notice of the mortgage and of everything disclosed by the record.

The record of a mortgage is not constructive notice of its existence or contents unless made so by statute,²² and recording under some statutes has been held not notice;²³ but where it is regarded as affording constructive notice the absence of actual notice becomes immaterial.²⁴ The record is

Extent of notice

Filing of mortgage on fixtures under Remington Code 1915 § 3662, making such filing "full and sufficient notice" to all persons dealing with the property, imports as much as actual notice to a subsequent purchaser of land of all its conditions, including agreement that property, although affixed to realty, shall be not constructive notice of more than it itself discloses,²⁵ but one dealing with the property is chargeable with notice of all facts which would be discovered by any inquiry reasonably suggested by the record.²⁶ When the effect of the instrument is limited by another unrecorded instrument intended as a defeasance, the recording of the mortgage does not give constructive notice.²⁷ Examination of the record of a mortgage gives actual notice of everything which it discloses, but no more;²⁸ but one cannot rely on the nondisclosure of matters of which he has actual knowledge.²⁹

The failure of the mortgagee to take proper measures to protect himself will not deprive him of the benefit of the constructive notice afforded by record.³⁰ A mortgagee is not charged with constructive notice of a mortgage filed after his.³¹

Mortgage by authorized officer of corporation

Where, secretary-treasurer by course adopted by corporation for transacting its business was authorized to execute a mortgage, constructive notice from recording the same will be imported to defendant, purchaser of mortgaged property, where his right to deny such notice rests solely on claim that officer's acts were ultra vires.—Peyton v. Instrument modifying recorded mortgage

An unrecorded instrument ratifying and modifying a recorded mortgage gives subsequent encumbrancers no actual or constructive notice of matter therein which is not incorporated in the mortgage proper.—Lee v. Seals, 256 S.W. 830, 215 Mo. App. 532.

Mortgage on products to be produced

Where farm owners before sugar season and to secure overdue note gave mortgage on all maple products to be produced on farm for one year and mortgage was duly recorded, the record was constructive notice after sap had run, to purchaser of maple syrup from mortgagor, and the mortgage and record were valid lien on syrup as against a purchaser.—Barton Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Hamblett, 178 A. 900, 107 Vt. 311.

Matters referred to in mortgage

(1) For the purpose of notice, a recorded mortgage may refer to other papers of record and in such case will be treated and considered as having set out the contents of such other papers.—Garner v. Arizona Egyptian Cotton Co., 197 P. 231, 22 Ariz. 318.

(2) Where the mortgage refers to the notes secured thereby, the purchaser is charged with notice that the notes contain provisions for the payment of attorney's fees.—Tuberville v. Simpson, 47 So. 784, 94 Miss. 154—11 C.J. p 538 note 34 [a].

(3) Where a recorded mortgage refers to a recorded bill of sale for description of the mortgaged property the purchaser is charged with constructive notice of the description in the bill of sale.—Pullen v. Berkeley, Tex.Civ.App., 27 S.W.2d 924.

(4) Mortgage on cotton without date, merely naming farms involved and amount of acreage, is valid as against mortgagor and intervener, claiming labor lien, where note was dated and referred to in the mortgage and intervener knew of mortgage.—Lunsford v. Pearce, Tex.Civ. App., 19 S.W.2d 71.

Recordation of trust deeds held notice of sureties' lien for payment of note for money borrowed to pay judgment on bond.—Fleming v. Branham, 139 S.E. 267, 148 Va. 510.

Property not described

Record of a mortgage applies only to property covered by it, and does not affect additional property not described therein, which is situated in another county in which it might be subsequently recorded.—Bankers' Discount Corporation v. Noe, 242 P. 610, 116 Or. 570.

Agreement held defeasance

Plaintiff's unrecorded agreement for consignment of automobile to dealer authorized to sell and repay amount advanced is a "defeasance," which prevented operation of recorded bill of sale to plaintiff as constructive notice.—Winakur v. Sapourn, 145 A. 342, 156 Md. 662.

Capacity of acknowledging party

When defendant examined the record, it had actual notice of everything which the record disclosed; but, where mortgage was acknowledged by the secretary and general manager for himself, there was no actual notice that he as secretary and general manager of the mortgagee corporation acknowledged the mortgage for the corporation.—J. Facts sufficient to make duty to inquire

Where furniture dealer had mortgaged his stock and mortgages taken from purchasers with proviso for sale of furniture in ordinary course of business and automatic transfer of lien to proceeds of sales, a buyer for thirty-five per cent of face value of numerous mortgages taken by dealer is thereby put on inquiry and charged with notice of recorded mortgage given by furniture dealer.—Alford v. Martin, supra.

As to after-acquired property, in some jurisdictions recording of the mortgage in the county in which the property is to be acquired constitutes notice of such mortgage from the date of its filing,³³ but it has been held that actual notice is essential and that the constructive notice furnished by recording is insufficient as against a bona fide purchaser.³⁴

b. Persons Affected by Notice

Generally the recordation of a mortgage is constructive notice to all persons subsequently dealing with the property.

Ordinarily, under the recording acts, the recordation of a mortgage as required by law is constructive notice as to all persons subsequently dealing with the property,³⁵ to subsequent purchasers or creditors³⁶ and mortgagees,³⁷ and there must be

Where a mortgage was registered, it was notice to a railroad shipping the mortgaged goods, as far as the ownership of the goods and the liability for freight were concerned.—Southern Ry. Co. v. W. A. Simpkins Co., 100 S.E. 418, 178 N.C. 273.

Recording as discharge of mortgagee's duty

gage on record, discharged her full duty in the matter of notice, and was under no duty to prevent the mortgagor from selling, or personally to warn others not to buy, even if she had notice that they were about to do so.—Hattermer v. Davis, 91 So. 321, 206 Ala. 613.

As to property not in county

If mortgaged personality is not in county at time of execution and filing of mortgage but is intended to be removed to such county and later becomes situated therein, mortgage becomes constructive notice from date of arrival of property within county.—Drum Standish Commission Co. v. Mortgage by third person for benefit of debtor

A duly filed mortgage, given an individual who purchased for benefit of corporation that indorsed his notes and to which he executed bill of sale, is not invalid, under a statute requiring change of possession or filing, N. Y. Lien L. § 230, as fraud on the creditors of the corporation, who are charged with knowledge of the mortgage.—In re R. E. Taylor Corp., N. Y., 248 F. 223, 160 C.C.A. 301.

Purchaser at execution sale

Registration of a mortgage, valid in its description of the property and otherwise, which created a lien on the property in controversy, constituted constructive notice to parties seeking protection as innocent purchasers through an execution sale subsequently made upon a judgment.—Thorndale Mercantile Co. v. Continental Gin Co., Tex.Civ.App., 217 S.W. 1059, error refused.

Persons furnishing labor or materials

Recorded mortgage on automobile, under Gen.Code §§ 8560, 8561, is notice to persons performing labor or furnishing materials in repairing same, whose lien is inferior to mortgage.—Metropolitan Securities Co. v. Orlow, 140 N.E. 306, 107 Ohio St. 583, 32 A.L.R. 992.

Where mortgagor without title

Bona fide purchaser of automobile after owner filed bill of sale is not chargeable with notice of mortgage preceding the owner's obtaining and filing bill of sale, and the mortgagee, to protect his rights, must have taken possession prior to the transfer to the purchaser.—Ohio Finance Co. v. McReynolds, 160 N.E. 727, 27 Ohio App. 42.

Purchaser of movables

In Louisiana, notwithstanding chattel mortgage law, buyer of movables is not required to examine public records.—General Contract Purchase Corporation v. Barrow, 136 So. 902, 18 La.App. 621.

very substantial grounds for denying it this effect.³⁸

Persons who are not subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers and are not within the terms of the statute, are not charged with constructive notice of the recorded mortgage;³⁹ and it has been held that only those acquiring some interest or right in the property under the grantor or mortgagor are charged with notice.⁴⁰

c. Instruments Affording Notice

The record of a mortgage, to constitute notice, must be of an instrument entitled to record; and the mortgage must have been made by the owner of the property in his right name and must contain a proper description of the property, and the debt secured.

In order that the record may constitute constructive notice it must be of an instrument entitled to record under the statute.⁴¹ A mortgage which is not executed and recorded in conformity with the statute, although it is spread upon the record, is not notice,⁴² so the record is a nullity where mortgage is insufficiently or improperly acknowledged⁴³

Mortgage of live stock

Mortgage covering all live stock in possession of, and owned by, mortgagor, when duly recorded, carried constructive notice, to subsequent mortgagee of mule, of mortgagor's possession.—Dutton v. Gibson, 131 So. 567, 222 Ala. 191.

Materialman taking mortgage

Where a lumber company sold lumber to a lessee of land holding under an agreement to remove the building at the end of the tenancy and the company took no lien on the building erected with the lumber furnished, and the lessee later executed a chattel mortgage on the building to a bank, which was duly recorded, and the lessee afterward purchased the land and executed a real estate mortgage to the lumber company for the lumber, and the bank foreclosed the chattel mortgage and took possession of the building, the rights of the bank were superior to those of the lumber company, which, having neglected to take a lien for more than eighteen months, was bound to take notice of the chattel mortgage.—Gafford Lumber & Grain Co. v. Mortgage of land and personalty not executed, as required by Gen.St. 1913 §§ 5206, 5208, is not valid chattel mortgage as against attaching creditor, despite § 5095 making defectively executed real estate mortgage notice of equitable interest.—Safford v. McNeil, 129 A. 721, 102 Conn. 184.

Proof of propriety of place of recording

Recordation cannot be held to operate as notice, in absence of evidence of grantor's residence or location of property.—Albertville Trading Co. v. Brooks, 113 So. 473, 22 Ala.App. 147.

Compliance with other statutes

Mortgagee's compliance with statute for sale of motor vehicles is not constructive notice to subsequent mortgagee without actual notice thereof, and a bill of sale of automobile intended as mortgage, filed with clerk of court, is not prior lien against subsequent mortgagee without actual notice, filing mortgage with county recorder.—Metropolitan Securities Co. v. Acknowledgment by less than all mortgagors

Under Civ.Code § 1161, requiring or attested,⁴⁴ or is not accompanied by proper affidavits as required by statute,⁴⁵ or is not indorsed as required.⁴⁶

Where the defect, whether in the acknowledgment or in the lack of proper attesting witnesses, does not appear upon the face of the instrument, some courts hold that when the instrument is fair upon its face, although there be a latent defect, the record thereof constitutes constructive notice under the recording acts.⁴⁷ Other courts take the opposite view, and hold that the defect, although not apparent on the face of the instrument, may be shown by extrinsic evidence and the effect of the record overcome.⁴⁸

Mortgage by stranger or under fictitious name. The record of a mortgage of personal property made by one who is not the owner of the property is not constructive notice to one dealing with the owner.⁴⁹ Likewise, by the weight of authority, the record of a mortgage executed by the owner in a that the execution of an instrument be acknowledged by the person executing it before recording it, the record of a mortgage acknowledged by only one of two or more mortgagors is constructive notice of its execution by him only.—Bell v. Sage, 212 P. 404, 60 Cal.App. 149.

Interest of officer

Under Comp.St. § 3311, providing that mortgage shall not pass property against creditors or purchasers for valuable consideration, except it be registered, mortgage acknowledged before mortgagee who was deputy clerk of court was ineffective to pass title as to creditors of mortgagor.—Cowan v. Dale, 128 S.E. 155, 189 N.C. 684.

Want of date

A mortgage filed for record is constructive notice, although the certificate of acknowledgment of the notary omitted the words "My commission expires —, 19—," required by statute.—First Nat. Bank v. Car-gill Elevator Co., 192 N.W. 111, 155 Minn. 30.

As between parties

(1) Although the recording of a defectively acknowledged deed of trust does not give constructive notice, it is valid between the parties, and gives a preference over grantor's general creditors.—Clarksburg Casket Co. v. Valley Undertaking Co., 94 S.E. 549, 81 W.Va. 212, 3 A.L.R. 660.

(2) A mortgage on a cotton crop, good only between the parties to it, because it was not properly acknowledged to be entitled to record, was a legal mortgage, and could not be considered an equitable mortgage for purpose of determining rights as against mortgagee of land.—Bank of Weiner v. Jonesboro Trust Co., 271 S.W. 952, 168 Ark. 859.

In Louisiana

(1) Recorded mortgage, regular on its face, but defective as notarial act because not signed by mortgagor in notary's presence, is not constructive notice thereof to third persons.—General Finance Co. of Louisiana v. Warner, App., 169 So. 112—Wes-sell v. Kite, App., 142 So. 363.

(2) If recorded, all persons except those having actual knowledge of intent to grant chattel mortgage can take advantage of defective notarial character.—Krivos v. Simmons, 134 So. 727, 16 La.App. 421—Dainello v. McCoy, 131 So. 608, 14 La.App. 358.

(3) Recordation of mortgage executed before notary without witnesses being present is not constructive notice.—Lieber v. Watts, 139 So. 778, 19 La.App. 650.

(4) Where third person has no actual knowledge that property is mortgaged, his right can be affected only by formal, notarial acts, and by constructive notice resulting from timely recordation, and recording an act under private signature is not notice.—Dainello v. McCoy, supra.

(5) Lessor, having no actual or constructive knowledge of defectively recorded mortgage at time mortgaged property was placed on leased premises, had lien prior to mortgage, notwithstanding lessor's actual knowledge subsequently acquired.—Lieber v. Watts, supra.

(6) However, in a case in which the third person had actual notice, it was held, in spite of defective authentication, that a recorded mortgage was effective as to such third person, and its recording gave him constructive notice.—Shevlin v. Grimmer, 119 So. 894, 10 La.App. 393.

Witness mistakenly named mortgagee

A provision that a mortgage be signed by mortgagor in presence of two witnesses in order to be filed was complied with, although name of one witness, by mistake, appeared as mortgagee, where mortgage showed that he had no beneficial interest, so that when filed it operated as notice to purchasers.—*Davis v. Where purchase-money mortgage was, for accommodation of purchaser, signed by his agent as purchaser and mortgagor, the contract reciting that pumps were to be used by true purchaser at a given address, the record of mortgage was notice to subsequent purchaser, since mortgage was within chain of title.—S. F. Bowser & Co. v. Hartnett, 273 S. W. 420, 217 Mo.App. 147.

wrong or fictitious name is not constructive notice to anyone dealing with the owner in his true name,⁵⁰ although the contrary has also been held.⁵¹ However, where a mortgagor has changed his name or has by usage acquired another name than that originally borne by him, the record of a mortgage executed by him under his new name by which he is known in the community is notice to a subsequent mortgagee taking a mortgage from the same person on the same property under another name by which he is also known and recognized in the community.⁵² Likewise one dealing with the mortgagor under the false name used in the mortgage is charged with constructive notice.⁵³

Change of name. A slight change in the mortgagor's name after the recording of the mortgage will not alter the rule as to notice, unless the parties subsequently dealing with the property are actu-

Description of property and debt. In order that the record of a mortgage may constitute notice, it is further necessary that the instrument contain a sufficient description of the property mortgaged⁵⁵ and of the debt secured.⁵⁶ However, the fact that the index of the mortgage does not sufficiently describe the mortgage is immaterial if the statute does not require description of the property in the index.⁵⁷

Mistakes in date of mortgage have been held not to vitiate the effect of the record.⁵⁸

d. Crop Mortgages

Generally the record of a crop mortgage operates to give constructive notice.

While there are cases to the contrary,⁵⁹ the record of a mortgage on crops to be grown is, accord-

When initials used

When the full Christian name of grantor in a mortgage is used, this imparts notice to one examining the records as to such grantor's identity, and error in the middle initial is immaterial; but, if initials only are used, they take the place of the Christian name, and in such case the correct initials are essential.—*McReynolds v. Purchase-money mortgage

While the record of filing of mortgage executed by owner under fictitious name is not ordinarily notice of such mortgage to bona fide purchaser from owner selling under his true name, a purchase-money mortgage executed by mortgagor under fictitious name, or for property sold to him under such name, is, when recorded, valid against subsequent mortgagee to whom such mortgagor has mortgaged it under his right name, although the subsequent mortgagee examined record and found none.—*Farmers' State Bank of Wheatland v. Sufficiency of description

After filing mortgage in recording office, as provided by law, third persons are charged with notice of contents as if they had actual notice and with notice of anything therein connected with the description which suggests inquiry as to identification of property which if pursued would lead to an identification thereof.—First Nat. Bank v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 186 P. 1036, 77 Okl. 93—First Nat. Bank of Washington, Okl., v. Haines, 185 P. 441, 76 Okl. 301.

Location of property

Property covered by mortgage will not be held to be located in any other parish than parish recited in act of mortgage, nor will it be presumed that third persons dealing with mortgagor had actual notice of location of property in parish other than that recited in act of mortgage, in absence of proof as to actual location of property.—Williams v. Miller, La. App., 160 So. 165.

Mutual mistake of parties

A crop mortgage, executed and filed, erroneously, by mutual mistake of the parties, described the wrong property, was of no force or effect as against a general creditor of the mortgagor, and such a creditor was unaffected by the mortgage, whether he was a creditor existing or subsequent at the execution of the mortgage.—*Bair v. ing to the generally accepted rule, operative as constructive notice,⁶⁰ even after the crops have been grown and severed,⁶¹ where the mortgage of this kind of property is held to be within the provisions of the recording acts;⁶² and this is true although the crop has been gathered and removed into another county.⁶³ Where a growing fruit crop is regarded as real property, a chattel mortgage thereon, filed and indexed as such, is not constructive notice of its contents.⁶⁴

When the owner of land gives a mortgage on his interest in crops to be grown, and thereafter leases the land to a tenant who mortgages the crop to him, his assignee of the tenant's mortgage is not chargeable with constructive notice of the owner's mortgage.⁶⁵

An agreement to give a mortgage on unplanted crops, incorporated into a mortgage on specifically described property, being wholly foreign to the subject of the mortgage, the filing of the mortgage will not give constructive notice of the agreement.⁶⁶

In general, withdrawal of the mortgage from the files destroys the validity of the registration.

Since filing a mortgage often takes the place of the more elaborate and expensive operation of having it copied into a book of records, withdrawal from the files will destroy the validity of the registration, provided the mortgagee is responsible for such withdrawal⁶⁷ and has no valid excuse therefor.⁶⁸ In accordance with the general rule, that the mortgagee is not responsible for the misconduct of the recording officer, an unauthorized withdrawal will not impair the sufficiency of the recording.⁶⁹ After a mortgage has been recorded in extenso withdrawal of the original from the files does not impair the effect of the filing.⁷⁰ Where a mortgage has been filed, and before being spread on the rec-

In Georgia an instrument passing title to growing crops is not bill of sale of personalty, and when executed before only one witness its admission to record is improper and does not constitute constructive notice. Assuming that bill of sale of growing crops, on severance from realty, is transformed into bill of sale of personalty, its unauthorized record is not a record of the transformed instrument.—Washington Loan & Banking Co. v. National Bank of Wilkes, 116 S.E. 657, 30 Ga.App. 77.

Defective description of land

A creditor without notice of a crop mortgage, which by reason of a misdescription of the land, the crops of which were intended to be mortgaged, was not bound by the recording thereof, was entitled to invoke the aid of the garnishment law, and thereby perfect a lien on the crop, and a lien so perfected, being effective from the time of its service, prevails over any secret or undisclosed equity of the mortgagee, and the mere filing by the mortgagee of an action in which such creditor was not a party could have no effect on his rights.—Bair v. Wiese, 215 P. 61, 124 Wash. 691.

ord is withdrawn by the mortgagee, the date of filing, for the purpose of giving notice, will be the day of its return.⁷¹ The withdrawal of a mortgage from the files merely for a temporary purpose will not, in itself, affect its validity or effect.⁷²

The mortgagee's burden of proving that the mortgage was properly recorded, or the burden of proving, by one who asserts it, that the recordation was invalid, may be sustained by any competent evidence sufficient to establish the necessary facts.

The burden of proving that a mortgage has been recorded is on the mortgagee,⁷³ and the burden of proving the invalidity of its recordation is on the one who asserts it.⁷⁴ That the recordation was in the proper place may be proved by circumstantial evidence,⁷⁵ and testimony that the mortgaged property was in the state when the mortgage was recorded is sufficient to show it was there, in the absence of evidence to rebut the presumption created by the statute.⁷⁶ The fact that a mortgage has been recorded may be shown by the certificate of the recording officer,⁷⁷ or by his indorsement on the mortgage,⁷⁸ and the testimony of the recording officer is admissible to show that his failure to perform his duty with respect to the filing was the result of instructions from the mortgagee.⁷⁹ The certificate of the recording officer is conclusive evidence that the mortgage has been recorded,⁸⁰ also as to the time of record,⁸¹ and as to what the re-

The presumption of proper recording is rebutted when the mortgage was taken from the custody of the recording officer before it had been transcribed.⁸³ In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that a mortgage remained on file after its filing in the recorder's office of the proper county.⁸⁴

§ 167. Questions of Law and Fact

Questions of fact relative to recording are matters for determination by a jury, while questions of law are for the court.

Under proper instructions given by the court, questions of fact relating to recordation of mortgages are for the jury to determine, such as whether the record was prior to levy of execution;⁸⁵ whether a mortgage was recorded within a reasonable time;⁸⁶ whether the property had been delivered to the mortgagee so as to obviate the necessity of filing or recording;⁸⁷ whether a mortgage was withheld from record by agreement between the parties,⁸⁸ or by the question of the place of residence of the mortgagor,⁸⁹ or of the existence of actual notice;⁹⁰ whether the description of the property is sufficient to give constructive notice,⁹¹ or notice of sufficient facts to make it a purchaser's duty to inquire further before buying the property;⁹² whether one was a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice;⁹³ whether the name used by the mortgagor was of sufficient notoriety to afford notice of his identity;⁹⁴ or whether the mortgagor of crops had, at the time of execution of the mortgage, a present interest in the land on which they were to be raised.⁹⁵

§ 168. Renewal and Refiling or Re-recording

See infra §§ 169-174.

§ 169. — Statutory Provisions

The renewal or refiling of mortgages is a matter of statutory regulation in some jurisdictions.

The purpose of statutory provisions making it necessary to renew or refile mortgages is to clear the record, made by the filing statute, by raising the presumption of payment in the absence of notice that the mortgage has not been paid.⁹⁸ Such a provision is supplementary to, and subject to the same rules of construction as, a provision requiring the initial filing or recording.⁹⁹

The repeal of a statute requiring refiling obviates the necessity of such refiling as to existing mortgages of record where the time for refiling under the repealed statute has not yet accrued.¹

Where, however, it is provided that the repeal of an existing act shall not affect any accrued right under the statute repealed, an amendatory act extending the time for renewal is not applicable to a mortgage already filed.² On the other hand, an amendatory act adding new requirements to the provisions for the refiling of a mortgage is applicable to the refiling of the existing mortgages;³ and a similar application has been given to a statute altering the period within which a mortgage must be refiled.⁴

§ 170. — Necessity

- a. In general
- b. Effect of actual notice
- c. Possession taken by mortgagee
- d. Execution of new mortgage
- e. Claims or rights accruing before time for renewal or refiling

a. In General

Statutory provisions generally make it necessary to renew or refile mortgages before the expiration of stated periods in order to preserve their validity as against creditors and subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith.

When so required by statute, a mortgage, although filed or recorded, must be refiled or renewed before the expiration of a stated period in order that it may be valid as against creditors and subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith.⁵ Un-

Typographical error

In Rev.Code 1919 § 1587, as to unrenewed mortgage ceasing to be valid as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith, the word "incumbrances" means incumbrancers, the error being a typographical one.—First State Bank of

Effect of saving clause

The saving clause of L.1917 p 126, repealing Rev.St.1908 § 515, as well as the rest of the Chattel Mortgage Act, merely preserves the validity of existing mortgages, and neither expressly nor by implication preserves the duty of the mortgagee to file sworn statements "annually" as provided in § 515. Where, under Rev. St.1908 § 515, plaintiff mortgagee was not required to file any sworn statement as to amount unpaid until in 1918, and in 1917 L.1917, p 127, § 7 went into effect, superseding § 515, plaintiff was not in default when § 7 went into effect, and no penalty had been incurred within a general saving clause as to repeal not extinguishing penalty "which shall have been incurred under such statute," so that such a clause did not have the effect of preserving plaintiff's duty to file annual statement.—Cobb v. International State Bank, supra.

2. Wis.—Pierce v. Westby State Bank, 261 N.W. 752, 218 Wis. 648. 11 C.J. p 544 note 97.

In enacting legislation enlarging time for filing affidavit of renewal of chattel mortgages, legislature presumably knew of statute making acts repealed operative to determine all limitations which shall have previously begun to run, unless repealing act otherwise expressly provides, and in not otherwise expressly providing, presumably intended that shorter time apply as to mortgages previously filed.—Pierce v. der other statutes, however, the mortgage once recorded remains valid as against such third persons until it is canceled of record.⁶

As filing has the same legal effect as taking possession by the mortgagee, failure to refile as required has the same legal effect as if the property were returned by the mortgagee to the mortgagor.⁷ Failure to renew or refile as required is only available to those persons designated by, or within the contemplation of, the statute,⁸ and does not affect the validity of the instrument as between the parties,⁹ nor, according to the generally accepted rule, as toward mere general creditors who have not acquired a lien on the property,¹⁰ although in some jurisdictions a contrary rule prevails.¹¹ The protection given to purchasers by such statutes, it is held, is not limited to purchasers from the mortgagor, but includes a purchaser from the vendee of the mortgagor, or, in the case of the mortgagor's death, from the person or persons in whom title to the property would have vested but for the mortgage.¹²

Institution of a foreclosure suit has been held not to extend the life of a mortgage beyond the period within which the filing of the renewal affidavit is required;¹³ and the effect of a failure to refile as required is not avoided by a suit on the note for which the mortgage was given, where judgment was not obtained thereon until after expiration of the period although the suit was commenced before.¹⁴ However, it has been held that a mortgage, although not renewed, is good as against an attachment of a prior creditor having notice, at the time of attachment, of proceedings for foreclosure and sale under the mortgage.¹⁵

Impossibility of refileing. A statutory enactment that the mortgage shall cease to be valid unless refiled or renewed is not overcome by the fact that it has become impossible to comply with the statute, as where the mortgagor has removed from the state.¹⁶

Effect of default. The fact that there has been a default in the condition of the mortgage will not ob-

Failure to renew chattel mortgage as invalidating the mortgage as respects the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy see Bankruptcy § 242.

Provision applicable to all mortgages and not limited to chattel mortgages fixing original lien for more than designated time.—Stokes v. Kirk, 47 P.2d 686, 97 Colo. 96.

Who are creditors
(1) "Creditor," as used in statute providing for renewal, is one who, without notice that debt secured by unrenewed mortgage is unpaid, extends credit or alters his position as to debtor to his detriment.—Hanson v. Blum, 207 N.W. 144, 53 N.D. 526.

(2) "Creditors" as used in statute providing that mortgage shall be void as against creditors of mortgagor after expiration of statutory period of original filing unless mortgage is refiled includes creditors who became such during period of original filing.—Commercial Sec. Bank of Ogden v. Chimes Press, 42 P.2d 990, 88 Utah 148.

Subsequent encumbrancer in good faith, within statute providing for renewal, is creditor who takes security for his debt, and his character as encumbrancer is determined by notice he has when credit is extended or his position altered to his detriment, rather than notice had when security is taken.—Hanson v. Blum, 207 N.W. 144, 53 N.D. 526.

Death of mortgagor

Where chattel mortgage had not been refiled after expiration of one year and mortgagor died, mortgaged property became unencumbered assets of deceased mortgagor's estate and was required to be distributed to his general creditors, with mortgagee having no rights superior to others.—In re Shay's Estate, 285 N.Y.S. 379, 157 Misc. 615.

viate the necessity of refiling,¹⁷ unless the mortgagee has taken possession of the property¹⁸ or has caused it to be advertised for sale under the mortgage.¹⁹

b. Effect of Actual Notice

Renewal or refiling is generally unnecessary as to a purchaser or mortgagee having actual knowledge of the mortgage.

In some jurisdictions, it has been held that a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee cannot be a purchaser or mortgagee in good faith where he has actual notice of the existence of a prior mortgage, and that, in such case, renewal or refiling is, as to him, unnecessary;²⁰ and failure to file a renewal affidavit cannot be availed of to defeat the rights of the mortgagee by a purchaser having actual notice sufficient to put him on inquiry as to whether the property he purchased was covered by the mortgage;²¹ and a creditor cannot attack the validity of a mortgage not renewed as required when the creditor was a party to the agreement as a result of which the mortgage was given.²² Where the statute makes the filing of a renewal statement imperative without regard to good faith on the part of third persons it has been held that actual notice will not obviate the necessity of refiling.²³ Actual notice, in order to take the place of renewal or refiling, must be notice not only of the original mortgages but also of the fact that the mortgage debt has not been paid.²⁴

Refiling is unnecessary when the mortgagee has taken possession of the property.

It is unnecessary to refile a mortgage when the mortgagee has taken possession before the time for refiling arrives,²⁵ or before the lien of the competing creditor has attached to the property,²⁶ even though after default by the mortgagor of the con-

Creditors

Words "in good faith" in statute, declaring mortgage invalid as against mortgagor's creditors, or subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer in good faith after two years and sixty days from filing thereof, are inapplicable to creditor of mortgagor, and a lien of attachment, levied on mortgaged personalty after two years and sixty days from filing of mortgage, not renewed, is superior to mortgage, although attachment creditor knew of pendency of foreclosure suit at time of levy.—Griffiths v. Thrasher, 26 P.2d 983, 95 Mont. 238.

Creditor taking mortgage as security

(1) In North Dakota it has been held that a creditor taking mortgage over three years after filing first mortgage, during which time debt arose, is not "subsequent good-faith encumbrancer," within statute.—Bank of North Dakota v. Bean, 216 N.W. 575, 56 N.D. 191.

(2) In South Dakota it has been held that, by taking mortgage after expiration of three years, creditor of mortgagor may acquire rights superior to holder of unrenewed mortgage.—Guaranty State Bank of Claremont v. Lawrence, 211 N.W. 801, 51 S.D. 33.

(3) Under Rev.Code 1919 § 1587, a creditor who takes security for his debt after a mortgage thereon has lapsed, and who thereby becomes a "subsequent encumbrancer," does not cease to be a creditor, and his knowledge of the existence of the lapsed mortgage is immaterial.—First State Bank of Buffalo v. Goodrich, 195 N.W. 1022, 47 S.D. 85.

(4) The requirement of good faith on the part of an encumbrancer, to invalidate as to him a prior mortgage, not renewed, obtains only as respects a debt which is, when created, secured by his encumbrance; hence, where a mortgage is given to secure a prior unsecured debt, notice of an unrenewed mortgage is immaterial, although, in such case, notice is material as respects the priority of an additional advance to the mortgagor made by the mortgagee at the time of the subsequent mortgage, which advance is secured by such mortgage.—First Nat. Bank v. Magner, 195 N.W. 1020, 47 S.D. 80.

(5) Holder of junior mortgage suing for foreclosure is entitled to assert precedence, as execution creditor, over holder of defectively refiled first mortgage, in avoidance of defense that plaintiff was not a mortgagee in good faith because of his knowledge of the prior mortgage, where plaintiff had reduced its claim to judgment and had levied execution on mortgaged property.—Heilker v. Hotel Gibson Co., 194 N.E. 879, 49 Ohio App. 16.

Estoppel of subsequent mortgagee

Where a bank taking mortgage subject to purchase-money mortgage on threshing outfit after maturity of notes for purchase price was party to subsequent action on notes, and that action was dismissed on partial payment secured by the buyers from the bank, and it was stipulated on dismissal that purchase-money mortgage should be extended, but there was no affidavit of amount due, filed within two years after maturity as required, the bank was estopped to insist that its mortgage became prior by failure to comply with statute.—*Othello State Bank v. dition of the mortgage,²⁷ or after the period for refiling has elapsed;²⁸ but where a mortgage expires without payment having been made, and it is not refiled as required by the statute, the lien becomes dead, and cannot be revived to the injury of creditors by the mortgagee taking possession of the property.²⁹ Correlatively if the mortgagee has renewed the mortgage in the manner provided, it is unnecessary that he should also take possession in order to protect his rights.³⁰

Sufficiency of change of possession. The change of possession to render refiling unnecessary must be actual and continuous; mere words will not effect a change in law where there is none in fact.³¹

d. Execution of New Mortgage

Ordinarily, execution of a new mortgage obviates the necessity for refiling.

It has been held that taking a new mortgage within the time for refiling the old one will continue the lien on the property if the transaction is bona fide;³² a copy refiled is to be regarded in effect as a new mortgage;³³ and a failure to refile will not invalidate a subsequent mortgage on the same property and between the same parties,³⁴ except as to those creditors who levied during the continuance of the default.³⁵

e. Claims or Rights Accruing before Time for Renewal or Refiling

Generally, a purchaser or encumbrancer becoming such during the original period of record or filing cannot take advantage of failure to renew or refile; but unless prevented by the terms of the statute creditors may do so.

Generally, a purchaser, or encumbrancer, who becomes such during the original period of filing or record is charged with notice and cannot afterward take advantage of a failure to refile or renew,³⁶ although there is authority to the contrary.³⁷ The term "subsequent" purchaser or encumbrancer in a renewal statute is ordinarily construed to mean purchasers or encumbrancers subsequent to the time of the refiling of the mortgage;³⁸ and a mortgagee, receiving a mortgage at a time when an earlier mortgage was on file and kept alive by renewal affidavits, cannot become a subsequent purchaser in good faith, even though the first mortgage is not thereafter renewed.³⁹ Where the statutes requiring refiling are not expressly restricted in their operation to subsequent creditors, a creditor who becomes such during the period of the original filing may take advantage of a failure to refile,⁴⁰ and may levy execution on the property.⁴¹

Omission of part of property

Where first mortgage, covering brood sows and other personalty, was not renewed and filed but was surrendered to mortgagee on execution of another mortgage in lesser amount, omitting some of property and not expressly covering spring pigs since born, lien of first mortgage was not intended to be continued by other mortgage as to such pigs; hence, proceeds of spring pigs belonged to holder of intermediate

Judgment creditor as purchaser

Where mortgagor's judgment creditor, at execution sale subject to mortgage, purchased mortgaged truck during original filing period of mortgage for small part of value of

Knowledge at time of levy not shown That creditor's complaint in intervention in mortgagee's action to foreclose mortgage was filed same day that execution on judgment obtained by creditor in attachment suit was levied on mortgaged property, is insufficient to give rise to gee's right of action against an officer levying on the mortgaged property before the expiration of the period of the original filing is not affected by his failure to refile,⁴² nor is his right of action as against one wrongfully taking possession of the property during such period.⁴³ Further, it has been held that the mortgagee need not refile his mortgage in order to protect his lien where, prior to the time for refiling, the property has been taken possession of by the assignee for creditors of the mortgagor.⁴⁴ Where both a first and an intervening mortgage have become invalid because of failure to renew, neither is entitled to preference in a distribution of assets of the mortgagor.⁴⁵

Subvendee. A purchaser in good faith, after the expiration of the time limited for the life of the original filing, from one who purchased within such time, acquires a title superior to the mortgagee.⁴⁶

§ 171. — Time for Renewal

The time for renewal or refiling is fixed by statute, and strict compliance therewith is required.

The time within which a mortgage must be refiled or renewed is fixed by the statutory provision requiring such refiling or renewal, and such a provision must be strictly complied with.⁴⁷ Where a certain period, such as thirty days, is given within which to refile a mortgage, any effort to renew the record before the period commences is ineffectual,⁴⁸ and it has been held that refiling after the period has elapsed is likewise of no avail,⁴⁹ and that no revival of the mortgage is possible after a default in refiling;⁵⁰ but under some statutes late refiling will validate the mortgage in case no rights exist or have been acquired against the mortgaged property before such filing.⁵¹

An amendment increasing the time in which a mortgage must be renewed does not apply to mortgages filed before its enactment, although the amendment is passed before the renewal of the mortgage was necessary under the previous law,⁵² although the contrary has been held.⁵³

Computation of time. In accordance with well settled general rules, in computing the time for refiling, the first day is to be excluded,⁵⁴ and it has been held that days of grace are to be reckoned in if the instrument secured by the mortgage is entitled to grace.⁵⁵ Although the last day of the pe-assumption that creditor had knowledge of existence of mortgage as unpaid obligation at time of levy under attachment or execution.—Commercial Security Bank of Ogden v. Chimes Press, supra.

a. In General

The statutory provisions governing the renewal or refileing must be strictly followed.

Statutory provisions requiring the refileing or renewal of mortgages must be strictly followed.⁶⁰ An insufficient filing is not cured by the filing of a renewal affidavit regular in form.⁶¹ Where a mortgage covers both real and personal property, it need not be refiled as a chattel mortgage in order to preserve its lien on the real property covered by it.⁶² The renewal statement required for the continuation of a mortgage may, by some statutes, be indorsed on the original mortgage, and the mortgage refiled.⁶³ Under a statute requiring the affidavit of renewal to be filed in the office where the mortgage is recorded, an affidavit so filed is sufficient, notwithstanding after recording of the mortgage in the county of the mortgagor's residence a change of boundaries put his residence in a new county.⁶⁴

There can be no proper extension or renewal of a mortgage where the mortgage has never been recorded, where the statute requires proper notation of the renewal on the record.⁶⁵

b. Renewal Statement

The renewal statement is ordinarily made by the mortgagee; but may be made by a duly authorized agent. The statement must contain all that is required by the statute. Unless otherwise required by statute, the statement for renewal may be sworn to before any officer authorized to administer an oath. In some jurisdictions the affidavit of extension must be entered on the docket.

The renewal statement is ordinarily required to be made by the mortgagee,⁶⁶ and a statement by one unauthorized to make it is insufficient to answer the requirements of the statute.⁶⁷ An affidavit of renewal may be made by an agent,⁶⁸ if the act of the agency is sworn to,⁶⁹ but an attempted extension by an agent in his own name as mortgagee is ineffectual.⁷⁰ In case the mortgagee is a corporation the affidavit must, of necessity, be made by an officer or agent of the corporation.⁷¹

Contents. The statutes requiring a renewal statement ordinarily prescribe what it must contain, and such requirements must be complied with.⁷² Under some statutes, the statement must set forth the mortgagee's interest in the mortgaged property,⁷³ which may be done on a separate paper, but so attached as to make substitution impossible;⁷⁴ and must contain a description of the mortgage,⁷⁵ the time when and place where filed,⁷⁶ the Effect of mistake

Where renewal affidavit to preserve mortgage was made in duplicate, and one was executed, and filing indorsement was made on both, although by mistake office copy was left with register of deeds and attached to mortgage, lien of mortgage was good against execution to satisfy judgment in behalf of third party against mortgagor.—Wamber v. Hart, 246 P. 1010, 121 Kan. 218.

Refiling wherever filed

Under N.Y. Lien L. § 235, as amended by L.1915, c 608, a statement or copy of a mortgage must, where chattels are in New York City, be refiled every year in several offices in which mortgage or copies may have names of the parties,⁷⁷ a description of the property,⁷⁸ the payments that have been made on the debt,⁷⁹ the amount that remains due and unpaid,⁸⁰ and the time to which the debt⁸¹ or the mortgage⁸² is to be extended. The actual amount of matured indebtedness on the date of renewal need not be stated so long as the obligations, matured and unmatured, exceed the amount stated, and the mortgage appears on its face to be for continuing indemnity.⁸³ While the statement of the mortgagee's interest in the property must be positive and distinct,⁸⁴ it is sufficient if it is made in good faith, with reasonable care, and is substantially accurate.⁸⁵ However, a statement is faulty which understates the amount due by a large amount,⁸⁶ or overstates it.⁸⁷ The statement and the affidavit may be read together when they refer to each other and it appears that such was the intention of the party; and, if together they contain the particulars required by the statute, the renewal is sufficient.⁸⁸

Jurat. In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, the statement for renewal may be sworn to before any officer authorized to administer an oath.⁸⁹ Further, it has been held that the oath need not appear on the affidavit but may be shown by evidence aliunde that the statements were made on oath duly administered.⁹⁰ Where a jurat is attached to a renewal affidavit, it seems to be necessary that it state the venue of the proceedings.⁹¹ The fact that the affidavit is sworn to before a notary public who is a stockholder in the mortgagee corporation will not destroy its effect as extending the notice imparted by record of the mortgage.⁹²

Docketing. In some jurisdictions the justice must enter the affidavit of extension on the docket to make the renewed mortgage valid as to third persons.⁹³

§ 173. — Successive Renewals

Successive renewals may be had, depending on the terms of the permissive statute.

In some jurisdictions, there may be successive renewals, with the termination of the validity of the mortgage on the failure to refile at the end of any renewal period.⁹⁴ Under some statutes, however, but one period of renewal is provided for.⁹⁵

§ 174. — Operation and Effect

A valid renewal of a mortgage continues the lien thereof.

The lien of the mortgage continues during the period of renewal,⁹⁶ and the renewal mortgage has all the binding force of the original mortgage,⁹⁷ but under some statutes the life of the lien is limited strictly to the period of extension allowed by statute,⁹⁸ although under others the mortgagee is given a reasonable period in which to take or demand possession.⁹⁹ A void mortgage is not validated by a renewal.¹

IX. POSSESSION, USE, AND CONVERSION OF PROPERTY

A. ESTATES AND INTERESTS OF PARTIES

§ 175. In General

The mortgagor is regarded as the owner of the mortgaged property as against all persons other than the mortgagee. A mortgagee's right and title is limited to that possessed by the mortgagor.

In some jurisdictions, as stated in § 1 supra, a chattel mortgage conveys the legal title in the property to the mortgagee, while in others it operates as a mere lien. In general, however, as against all persons other than the mortgagee, the mortgagor is regarded as the owner of the mortgaged property.² A mortgagee of a chattel acquires only such right and title to the property as his mortgagor had.³

Where the mortgage is given to secure the amount of the separate indebtedness of the mortgagor to each of several mortgagees, the persons named as mortgagees do not take as joint tenants, but as tenants in common; each taking an undivided interest as tenant in common of the property conveyed by the mortgage, in proportion to the respective debt of each.⁴

Although there is authority to the contrary, the generally accepted rule is that legal title to the mortgaged property is vested in the mortgagee on default or breach of condition by the mortgagor.

There is authority that on default or breach of condition by the mortgagor the mortgagee is not vested with title and some further action on his part is necessary to divest the mortgagor of title,⁵ but the generally accepted rule, in the absence of statutory qualifications, is that after default or breach of condition the legal title to the mortgaged property is vested in the mortgagee, subject only to the right, if any, of the mortgagor to redeem,⁶ especially where the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property,⁷ although the rule also applies if the property is not reduced to possession.⁸ The mortgagee is regarded as the absolute owner at least for the purpose of possession and foreclosure,⁹ but where a right of redemption exists, he does not acquire the absolute title in the sense that he can use the property as his own,¹⁰ and although he is the general owner, his ownership is restricted by the rights of the mortgagor.¹¹ The fact that a mortgage authorizes a mortgagee to sell the property on default does not prevent the title from becoming absolute in him without a sale.¹² An unaccepted tender of the mortgage debt, after breach of the condition, will not revest title in the

Under trust deeds. Where personal property is mortgaged under a trust deed to secure the payment of a debt, on default the mortgagee or trustee becomes vested with the legal title and the right of possession,¹⁴ and the trust continues as long as any part of the secured indebtedness is not discharged.¹⁵

B. POSSESSION, CONTROL AND USE OF PROPERTY

§ 177. Before Default

Before default, in the absence of statutory provisions or stipulations to the contrary, the general rule is that the mortgagee is entitled to possession but there are a number of jurisdictions which hold that the right to possession is vested in the mortgagor.

In a number of jurisdictions it is held, in some instances under statutes expressly so providing, that the mortgagor, in the absence of an agreement otherwise, is entitled to possession until default,¹⁶ but the general rule, in some instances so provided by statute, is that where there is no language in the mortgage and no other agreement to restrain or control, the mortgagees have the right to immediate possession of the property conveyed in all cases.¹⁷ The right of the mortgagee to possession is not impaired by the circumstance that no part of the debt secured or interest is due,¹⁸ or that a large part of it has been paid,¹⁹ or that he has possession of a part of the mortgaged property equal in value to the amount of the indebtedness.²⁰

The assignee of the mortgagee is, likewise, entitled to possession before default where the mortgage is silent as to possession.²¹ Possession when taken by the mortgagee will not be interfered with except where necessary for the protection of the rights of others.²² So, where the property is delivered by the grantor to a trustee under a deed of trust, he is entitled to possession of the property as against all third persons.²³

A second mortgagee is entitled to possession against everyone except the first mortgagee and those claiming under him.²⁴

The right of the mortgagor to remain in possession may be waived by him,²⁵ or lost,²⁶ such as by abandonment of the property,²⁷ by the bankruptcy of the mortgagor,²⁸ or by other acts or circumstances discussed in §§ 179-182 infra. Although the mortgagee believes that the mortgagor has abandoned the property, he does not have the right to enter the premises of the mortgagor without legal process and to take possession of the property.²⁹

Crops. In accordance with the general rule stated above, a mortgagee of crops has a right to possession of the crops after they are gathered.³⁰ A grant of possession of growing crops by the mortgagor thereof gives no right to the mortgagee to take possession of the land.³¹

Receivers. Under ordinary circumstances a mortgagee in possession will not be disturbed by the appointment of a receiver³² as long as any balance is due on the mortgage.³³ Where a receiver appointed in a suit between partners sells the partnership property, it does not affect the paramount lien of a mortgagee who is a stranger to the record.³⁴

Maintenance of property. A chattel mortgagee is under no implied obligation to advance money to maintain the property, even though the execution of the mortgage may deprive the mortgagor of his ability to do so.³⁵ A mortgagor in possession of the property has the duty to protect the goods and is liable to the mortgagee for his failure to do so.³⁶

§ 178. — Agreements or Stipulations as to Possession in General

The parties to the mortgage may provide as to the possession of the property by agreement. Where the terms on which the mortgagee may take possession are specified, the mortgagor is vested with a possessory right until that time.

The parties to a chattel mortgage may provide for possession of the property, pending the maturity of the indebtedness, as they see fit,³⁷ and hence, may stipulate that the mortgagor shall retain possession of the mortgaged property until default, thus entitling the mortgagor to possession,³⁸ or may stipulate that the mortgagee shall be entitled to possession³⁹ or that he may take possession at any time.⁴⁰ Although there is no express agreement, a stipulation that the mortgagor may retain possession⁴¹ or that the mortgagee is entitled to possession⁴² may be implied from the terms of the mort-

Possession of surety

Under a written contract providing that one should sign a note at a bank as surety, and that principal should thereupon buy certain material in the name of and for the sole use and benefit of the surety, and that on payment of the note the surety

gage as a whole. Where the mortgage specifies the terms under which the mortgagee may take possession, the mortgagor is vested with a possessory right until that time,⁴³ as where it is provided that the mortgagee may take possession on deeming himself insecure,⁴⁴ or on an attempt to remove the chattel from the state or county,⁴⁵ or on default.⁴⁶ If the mortgagor is given possession at the time of the execution of the mortgage, it will be presumed that the parties intended that he should retain it until condition broken;⁴⁷ but if the mortgagor is merely permitted to remain in possession, it has been held that the mortgagee may take possession at any time.⁴⁸ A stipulation will not be extended by construction beyond its plain terms.⁴⁹ The mortgagor's right to possession from an express or implied stipulation is a right personal to him and is not assignable.⁵⁰ Where a mortgage covering the accounts of the mortgagor permits him to remain in possession, he is entitled to sue in his own name on an account covered by the mortgage.⁵¹

§ 179. — Depreciation of Property as Authorizing Taking Possession

A mortgagor's right to possession may be lost by misuse of the property. A stipulation that the mortgagee may take possession in case of depreciation in the value of the property contemplates a substantial or unreasonable depreciation.

A mortgagor's right to possession may be lost by such misuse of the mortgaged property as will necessarily injure its value.⁵² Where there is a stipulation in a mortgage that the mortgagee may take possession in case of a depreciation in the value of the property, this means a substantial or unreasonable depreciation, not a mere nominal diminution.⁵³ The standard is the value of the property at the time when the mortgage was executed,⁵⁴ and the jury determines whether the depreciation is sufficient to justify the mortgagee in taking possession.⁵⁵

§ 180. — Sale or Removal by Mortgagor as Authorizing Taking Possession

- a. In general
- b. Stipulation in mortgage

a. In General

A mortgagor's right to possession may be forfeited by a sale or disposition in derogation of the mortgagee's rights. Under statutes so providing, the mortgagee is entitled to possession where the mortgagor removes the chattel from the county.

A mortgagor's right to possession may be forfeited by a sale or disposition of the mortgaged prop-should deliver and sell the property to a third person, the surety was prima facie entitled to possession of the property pending repayment of the note by the principal.—Larsen v. Roberts, supra.

paired by the circumstance that the mortgage contains a provision permitting the mortgagee to take possession on maturity of the mortgage.—Ferguson v. Thomas, 26 Me. 499.

erty in derogation of the mortgagee's rights,⁵⁶ and in case of such a transfer, the mortgagee may re-take possession wherever he may find the property.⁵⁷

Statutory provisions preventing the removal of the mortgaged property from the county in which it is situated at the time of the execution of the mortgage gives the mortgagee, independent of any such provision in the mortgage, the right to the possession of the property in such case,⁵⁸ and after the mortgagee's death this statutory right may be exercised by his personal representative.⁵⁹ Such a statute does not apply where the chattel is removed from a temporary situs to the county stated in the mortgage to be the mortgagor's residence.⁶⁰

b. Stipulation in Mortgage

A stipulation that the mortgagee may take possession of the property if it is sold, assigned, or removed by the mortgagor is valid and enforceable although default in payment has not been made.

ed,⁶² and the condition is not waived⁶³ or modified by a subsequent stipulation or agreement,⁶⁴ although default in payment has not been made.⁶⁵ Under a clause authorizing the mortgagee to sell the property on any attempted disposition thereof by the mortgagor, such a disposition gives him an immediate right to possession,⁶⁶ and he can sue a third person who converts the property before the maturity of the mortgage debt.⁶⁷ The mortgagor is not in fault, however, for not delivering the goods if they are not demanded.⁶⁸

What constitutes a breach. It has been held sufficient to constitute a breach of a stipulation not to sell, remove, or dispose of the mortgaged property that the mortgagor sold a part thereof,⁶⁹ that a portion of the property was consumed,⁷⁰ that the property was converted by a third person,⁷¹ or that the mortgagor removed it out of the state, without regard to the purpose for which the removal was made;⁷² but a temporary loan of the mortgaged chattel,⁷³ the hiring of a person to keep charge of the property,⁷⁴ or a sale or removal not impairing the security,⁷⁵ is not a breach entitling the mortgagee to possession. § 181. — In Case of Levy on Chattels

A condition that the mortgagee may take possession in case a levy is made on the property is valid and enforceable although the debt is not yet due.

A condition in a mortgage that the mortgagor shall not permit a levy to be made on the property and that the mortgagee may take possession in case a levy is made is a valid stipulation,⁸³ and immediately on a levy being made the right of possession vests in the mortgagee,⁸⁴ even though the mortgage debt is not yet due.⁸⁵

§ 182. — Insecurity Clause in Mortgage

a. In general

b. When right may be exercised

a. In General

A stipulation giving the mortgagee a right to take possession of the property if he feels insecure is valid and enforceable, but the mortgagee must not secure possession by force or stealth.

A stipulation in a mortgage giving the mortgagee a right to take possession of the mortgaged chattels in case he feels insecure is valid⁸⁶ and enforceable⁸⁷ without the mortgagor's consent,⁸⁸ although the mortgage debt, or an installment thereof, is not due⁸⁹ or the time for payment thereof has been extended.⁹⁰ Under an insecurity clause a mortgagee has been allowed to maintain an action against a third person for the possession of the property before the maturity of the mortgage debt,⁹¹ or trover for its value;⁹² but he must not resort to force or stealth to secure possession from the mortgagor and is obliged to seek his remedy by action in the absence of consent.⁹³ When the right to repossess the property is exercised, the mortgagee must sell the property if the terms of the mortgage so provide.⁹⁴ An insecurity clause in a mortgage is not a personal covenant and hence it is transferable.⁹⁵

Generally, to justify the exercise of the right to take possession under an insecurity clause the mortgagee must act reasonably and in good faith on probable cause to apprehend loss of the security, but in some jurisdictions he has an absolute discretion, at least if he exercises it in good faith.

The right of a mortgagee to take possession under an insecurity clause is operative when a substantial change has taken place in the security which places the mortgagee in a less favorable position.⁹⁶

Unauthorized taking by sheriff

Automobile dealer's and discount corporation's repossessing car under insecurity clause of purchase mortgage before buyer's default, through an unauthorized act of the sheriff acting colore officii, was held forcible taking constituting civil trespass entitling buyer to damages.—See v. Automobile Discount Corporation, supra.

Taking possession of part only

A mortgagee cannot take possession of part only and retain his lien as to the remainder as to third persons, but must, as the insecurity clause requires, declare the whole debt due, sell the property, and account for the proceeds.—Van Zele v. Cleaveland, supra.

N.D.—Englund v. Souther, 133 N.W.

Although the ordinary wording of the insecurity clause is that the mortgagee may take possession whenever he "deems" himself insecure, the prevailing doctrine is that an arbitrary power is not conferred and he must act reasonably and have probable cause to apprehend the loss of his claim to justify a taking,⁹⁷ although if he acts in good faith with probable cause, he may determine for himself whether he is unsafe in his security,⁹⁸ and it is not necessary that the mortgage be actually insecure.⁹⁹ In some jurisdictions, however, a somewhat different doctrine has been adopted wherein the mortgagee has an absolute discretion in declaring a forfeiture of possession regardless of whether he has reasonable grounds for deeming it necessary,¹ at least if he, in fact, does feel insecure or believes in good faith that taking of possession is necessary to protect his security.² In determining whether a mortgagee had reasonable ground to believe that he was in danger of losing his security, any competent relevant evidence may be admitted,³ and where the evidence is conflicting, the question of the mortgagee's good faith and the existence of reasonable grounds for his action are for the jury.⁴

§ 183. After Default in General

Subject to some authority to the contrary, the general rule is that the mortgagee is entitled to possession on default or breach of condition for the limited purpose of foreclosure and sale, if the right is not waived. A notice or demand for possession is unnecessary unless there is a stipulation therefor. A junior mortgagee has no higher right to possession than the mortgagor as against a senior mortgagee.

As a general rule, in some instances under statutes so providing, on default or breach in the condition of the mortgage, the mortgagee obtains an immediate right to possession of the property,⁵ with-

Abandonment by mortgagor

Under an insecurity clause, a mortgagee is justified in taking charge of stock abandoned by mortgagor.—Glaser v. Henderson, Tex. Civ.App., 2 S.W.2d 987, 989, citing Corpus Juris.

Subjecting property to liens

Mortgagee of a mule, sold to the mortgagor, a tenant, validly took possession under insecurity clause, where the tenant changed landlords and the second landlord was to make advances with incident liens taking priority of the mortgage.—R. P. Harris & Co. v. Thomas, 88 So. 51, 17 Ala.App. 634.

Conditions justifying writ of sequestration

An insecurity clause authorizes a seizure of the mortgaged property without reference to conditions legally justifying issuance of writ of sequestration.—Guaranty Securities Co. v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 254 S.W. 240, reversed on other grounds Brown v. Guaranty Securities Co., Com.App., 265 S.W. 547.

Change should reasonably appear

Under a mortgage authorizing the mortgagee to repossess automobile whenever he deems debt insecure, change in status of security, or of debtor affecting security, should reasonably appear.—Manufacturers' Finance Acceptance Corporation v. Woods, 132 So. 611, 222 Ala. 329, reversing 132 So. 608, 24 Ala.App. 202.

Mortgagee's good faith established

In an action by chattel mortgagors of stock, farm machinery, tools, etc., against the mortgagees, who were also mortgagees of the farm, for conversion of the mortgaged chattels, the fact that the hay and grain crops were practically failures, that mortgagors had sold some of the stock and were seeking to sell the hay, and that one of the mortgagors had virtually abandoned the property, were held to establish mortgagees' good faith in taking possession under insecurity clause.—Harvey v. Weaver, 201 N.Y.S. 274.

out consent on the part of the mortgagor,⁶ and regardless of possession of the mortgage note;⁷ but in some jurisdictions, under the theory that he still possesses merely a lien, the mortgagee is not entitled to possession before foreclosure, although default has been made in the conditions of the mortgage.⁸

The right of the mortgagee to the possession continues as long as any part of the mortgage debt remains due;⁹ and this right is not affected by partial payments having been made on the mortgage debt,¹⁰ by any agreement with the mortgagor that is not supported by a sufficient consideration,¹¹ or by the appointment of a receiver.¹²

If the debt is past-due at the time of the execution of the mortgage, it is immediately payable, and the mortgagee is entitled to possession at once after the execution and delivery of the mortgage.¹³

Unless stipulated otherwise in the mortgage,¹⁴ the mortgagee's right to possession is not absolute but it is limited to possession for the purpose of foreclosure or sale,¹⁵ although it is not conditioned on his payment of the difference between the value of the property and the amount of the debt.¹⁶ His right to possession is not postponed by an agreement to extend the time for payment of the debt.¹⁷

In Texas

(1) After default or breach of condition, the mortgagee is entitled to take possession.—Terry v. Spearman, Com.App., 259 S.W. 563, reversing on other grounds, Civ.App., 246 S.W. 103—Moore-Hustead Co. v. Joseph W. Moon Buggy Co., Civ.App., 221 S.W. 1032.

(2) Under a former rule, the mortgagor was entitled to possession before foreclosure.—Groos v. Iowa Park First Nat. Bank, Civ.App., 72 S.W. 402.

(3) The early Texas rule was applied where the respective rights of the parties were to be determined by Texas law.—Roach v. St. Louis Type Fdy., 21 Mo.App. 118.

Effect of statute requiring sale

A statute which requires the mortgagee to sell at public auction impliedly authorizes him to take possession of the property for that purpose.—Wixom v. Davis, 207 P. 694, 57 Cal.App. 520.

Contract giving mortgagor use of property

Mortgages were held not superseded by a written contract in which the mortgagee gave the mortgagor the use of the property, so that the mortgagor was not given an absolute right of possession extending beyond the time at which the mortgagee demanded the return of the property.—Haddam State Bank v. McHenry, 213 P. 1059, 113 Kan. 39.

Mortgage of crops

When so provided by statute, a mortgage of crops which confers the legal title confers the right to possession after the last day.—Faulk v. Dorsey, 166 So. 792, 232 Ala. 85—Houston Nat. Bank of Dothan v. J. T. Edmonson & Co., 75 So. 568, 200 Ala. 120.

Application of proceeds of other chattels

(1) If mortgagee was authorized by mortgagor to apply proceeds of part of mortgaged property to payment of open account and then to mortgage debt, as against mortgagor and another mortgagee not asserting any rights, mortgagee was entitled to possession of sufficient of property to satisfy balance of mortgage debt.—Conrad Mercantile Co. v. Siler, 241 P. 617, 75 Mont. 36.

(2) Right to possession of mortgaged chattels was held not affected by failure to apply proceeds of other mortgaged chattels previously sold on mortgage notes which far exceeded such proceeds.—Sholes v. Citizens' State Bank of Holyoke, 261 P. 456, 82 Colo. 432.

A mortgagee cannot seize the chattel for failure to pay the indebtedness when due where on inquiry, he fails to inform the mortgagor as to the amount due, the amount being unascertained at the time of the execution of the mortgage, for under such circumstances the mortgagor is not in default.¹⁸

Where a bond to retain possession has been given by the mortgagor, the mortgagee is not entitled to possession.¹⁹

Where the mortgagor remains in possession after default with the permission and by the consent of the mortgagee, the mortgagor's rights and liabilities are those of a bailee.²⁰

A mortgagee is not required by law to pay off prior mortgages or to perform conditions necessary to perfect title to any of the mortgaged property, even though the property is lost through omission so to do,²¹ nor does he become liable for the debts of the mortgagor by taking over his property and business,²² and his possession is not conditioned on the assumption of any obligations or indebtedness incurred by the mortgagor.²³

Notice or demand. In the absence of a stipulation in the mortgage it is not necessary that the mortgagee should give notice of his intention to take possession on breach of condition,²⁴ nor make a prior demand.²⁵ However, where the debt secured by a mortgage is payable on demand, and the mortgagor is entitled to possession until breach of condition, the mortgage will not become absolute so that the mortgagee will have the right of possession until demand for payment is made.²⁶ A demand is not necessary when the mortgage does not state when the debt is to be paid, since it is due immediately, and, payment not being made, the mortgagee's title becomes absolute.²⁷

Waiver or estoppel. Where the chattel mortgagee does not repossess the chattel after condition broken the presumption is that the right to declare condition broken is waived.²⁸ So, where the mortgagee receives payment of the indebtedness due, after default, he thereby waives his right to immediate possession,²⁹ but a mere demand for payment is not a waiver of the right to possession.³⁰ A mortgagee's right to possession of mortgaged cattle is not affected by the placing of different brands on the cattle after the execution of the mortgage where the branding has been done without the consent of the mortgagee.³¹

Mortgage securing several notes. Where several notes maturing at different dates are covered by the mortgage, and failure to pay any of the notes constitutes a breach of condition, the mortgagee may take possession on the first default³² or may delay until the maturity of the last note;³³ but where the mortgagor pays the mortgagee enough to satisfy the first of two notes covered by the mortgage, the mortgagee may not interfere with the property until the mortgagor's default in the payment of the second note.³⁴ In replevin by the mortgagee to recover the mortgaged chattels from the holder of a portion of the notes secured by the mortgage, it has been held that equities as between the parties may be adjusted.³⁵ Where a chattel mortgage secures an aggregate indebtedness made up of notes payable to several mortgagees, and maturing at successive periods, no one mortgagee has the right to take possession of the property when his claim becomes due.³⁶

Note payable in installments. Where a note secured by a chattel mortgage is payable in installments, the mortgagee is not obligated to take possession on default in one of the installments, although he may do so,³⁷ or he may wait until the entire debt secured by the mortgage becomes due.³⁸

An equitable mortgage of chattels, containing no words of alienation, does not authorize the mortgagee to seize the property on default, but his remedy is in a court of equity.³⁹

Rights of junior encumbrancers. In the absence of fraud, a junior mortgagee, after condition broken, is entitled to possession of the property as against the whole world except the holder of the senior mortgage.⁴⁰ A junior mortgagee has no higher right to possession than the mortgagor as against the senior mortgagee.⁴¹ Where a second mortgage is executed after breach in the condition of the first mortgage, the second mortgagee cannot recover possession of the property from the mortgagor after default, his only remedy being to redeem from the first mortgage.⁴² A prior mortgagee is not bound to exercise diligence in acquiring possession of the property on the maturity of his mortgage, as against one who, after such maturity and with knowledge of its existence, takes another mortgage as security merely for a preëxisting debt.⁴³

After foreclosure. After foreclosure the mortgagee is entitled to take possession of the chattels covered by the mortgage for the purpose of delivering them to the purchaser under the foreclosure proceeding,⁴⁴ and to obtain possession for such purpose, the mortgagee has an implied, irrevocable license to enter the premises in a peaceable and reasonable manner and to take away the goods mortgaged.⁴⁵

The mortgagee is ordinarily regarded as entitled to possession after default or breach of condition where the mortgage so stipulates, although his taking possession does not confer ownership upon him or cut off the mortgagor's right of redemption.

A stipulation that on default or breach of condition the mortgagee may take possession is valid,⁴⁶ unless it is inseparable from an invalid provision of the mortgage,⁴⁷ and, as a general rule, the mortgagee is entitled to possession in accordance with its terms,⁴⁸ although in a jurisdiction where the mort-

Attempt to give absolute title

(1) In a so-called lease, which was in effect a mortgage, and which gave the mortgagee the right to possession and absolute title on the mortgagor's default in making any payment, the provision giving absolute title was inseparable from that giving right to possession, and both were invalidated by the invalidity of the former.—Blodgett v. Rheinschild, supra.

(2) A provision in a mortgage that in case of default all rights of the mortgagor shall be forfeited and the possession of the car passed to the mortgagee discharged from further liability is ineffectual, the stipulation purporting to give the mortgagee the right to take possession being so inseparably connected with the provision attempting to cut off the debtor's equity of redemption that it must be held void in toto.—Bonestell v. gagee has no right to possession before foreclosure, it has been held that a stipulation does not confer this right.⁴⁹ In accordance with the general rule, a mortgagee who peaceably exercises his right to repossess the property cannot be held liable for damages or for conversion.⁵⁰ The stipulation may be enforced even against the personal representative of the mortgagor after the death of the latter,⁵¹ and is coupled with an interest and is irrevocable.⁵² The permission to take possession confers no greater right than the mortgagee would have had by operation of law,⁵³ and the taking of possession does not confer ownership upon the mortgagee or, other than enhancing his security, enlarge his interest,⁵⁴ or cut off the mortgagor's right of redemption.⁵⁵ After taking possession, the mortgagee must conform to the letter and the spirit of the mortgage.⁵⁶ If the mortgagee institutes foreclosure proceedings

instead of taking possession under the stipulation, he cannot claim title to the property under such provision.⁵⁷ A mortgagee has no right to possession where the mortgage reserves it to the mortgagor on default.⁵⁸ A statute which gives the mortgagee the right of immediate possession on default or breach of condition does not control where the parties provide by contract the terms and conditions under which the mortgagee is entitled to possession.⁵⁹ A contract postponing the date when the mortgagee is entitled to possession, founded on a valid consideration, is valid.⁶⁰

Installments and series of notes. The mortgagee of a chattel has the right to take possession thereof on default in payment of an installment or any of a series of notes, where the mortgage provides for taking possession in case of default,⁶¹ even in the absence of an acceleration clause.⁶²

Attempt to defraud

Under an indemnity mortgage providing that the mortgaged property shall vest in the mortgagee when the mortgagor attempts to defraud, the mortgagee may take possession of the property in the event that the mortgagor attempts to defraud him by some act having a tendency to defeat the mortgage security.—Sidener v. Bible, 43 Ind. 230—11 C.J. p 560 note 20.

Deed in escrow

Where owner placed deed to mortgagee in escrow making return of deed dependent on owner's performance of certain conditions, on owner's violation of such conditions, mortgagee could take possession of mortgaged property under mortgage default clause, notwithstanding escrow period had not expired, as against assignee of owner's right in property who received no assignment of owner's rights under escrow agreement.—Woods Leasing Co. v. Funcheon, 25 P.2d 47, 134 Cal.App. 111.

Effect of unfilled blank in mortgage

That blank in mortgage authorizing mortgagee to take possession on default was not filled in did not deprive mortgagee of right to proceed under such provision.—Baleri v. Riesenecker, 230 N.W. 605, 201 Wis. 454, reversing on other grounds 227 N.W. 9, 201 Wis. 454.

§ 185. — Manner of Taking Possession

The mortgagee may bring an action for possession or he may take possession without an action providing he does so without force, threats, or violence.

After default a breach of condition the mortgagee may bring an action for possession,⁶³ or he may take possession peaceably without an action for the purpose⁶⁴ wherever he finds the chattel⁶⁵ and without the consent of the mortgagor,⁶⁶ but it has also been held that if the mortgagor does not consent judicial process for possession is necessary.⁶⁷

As a general rule, the only restriction on the mode by which the mortgagee shall secure possession of the mortgaged property after breach of condition is that he must act in an orderly manner and without creating a breach of the peace.⁶⁸ The mortgagee must not take possession by the use of force, threats, or violence,⁶⁹ nor, it has been held, by the use of fraud⁷⁰ or stealth,⁷¹ and if he is guilty of trespass in regaining possession he must respond in damages to the mortgagor.⁷² If no breach of the peace is involved the mortgagee may enter the mortgagor's premises and take the property,⁷³

but he is not permitted to break and enter,⁷⁴ or to exclude the mortgagor from the premises.⁷⁵

The manner of taking possession under an insecurity clause in the mortgage is discussed in § 182 supra.

Employment of peace officer. The mortgagee must not intimidate by securing the aid of an officer who pretends to act colore officii,⁷⁶ but the mere fact that the mortgagee is accompanied by a constable or other officer who does not act under color of his office, and where it does not appear that any force or threats were used in taking possession, will not make the mortgagee liable for trespass.⁷⁷ It has been held, however, that it is not a voluntary turning over of possession where a constable, although not armed with process, demands the property as an officer, and asserts that it is his duty as such officer to take it.⁷⁸

§ 186. Use and Disposition of Property or Proceeds

A mortgagor in possession must not impair the rights of the mortgagee. A mortgagee in possession is liable for any loss for which he is responsible but he need not protect a junior mortgagee of whom he has no notice.

The mortgagor in possession of the property must act so as not to impair the rights of the mortgagee,⁷⁹ and he may not over the objection of the mortgagee use the property in any unusual, unc customary, or unexpected way, particularly if such use injures the property or depreciates its value.⁸⁰ A mortgagee in possession is not liable for a loss suffered by the property which does not result from any fraud or negligence on his part,⁸¹ and likewise he is not liable for depreciation in the market value of the mortgaged chattel in the absence of anything done by him to prevent payment of the money or sale of the property.⁸² However, the loss, injury, or destruction of the mortgaged property while in the possession of the mortgagee, occurring through his neglect, will render him liable for damages or for a conversion.⁸³ In accordance with these rules, after default, while the right of redemption exists, a mortgagee in possession is liable for any injury or loss caused by his neglect in the management of the property,⁸⁴ but if he be without fault, he is not responsible, even though the property covered by the mortgage is destroyed.⁸⁵ A senior mortgagee who has no notice of a subsequent encumbrance owes no duty to the subsequent encumbrancer to care for or to protect the security.⁸⁶ Where by the terms of the contract the mortgagee it the right of entry for such purpose.

Acts of dominion over the chattel by the mortgagor or mortgagee inconsistent with the other's rights are considered in §§ 214-215 infra.

§ 187. — Income, Rents, and Profits

- a. Mortgagee in possession
- b. Mortgagor in possession
- c. Third person in possession

a. Mortgagee in Possession

A mortgagee in possession while the right of redemption exists is liable to account for the income, profits, and proceeds of the mortgaged property. If he is intrusted with the sale of the chattel he is more than a bailee or agent but rather is a trustee or factor.

While the right of redemption exists, a mortgagee in possession is liable to account for the income, profits, and proceeds of the mortgaged chattels,⁸⁸ and, if the nature of the property permits, he is bound to exercise reasonable diligence in keeping it employed,⁸⁹ but it has been held that he is chargeable for the usual hire only, and not for what was really made out of the use of the property.⁹⁰ Where the mortgagee wrongfully deprives the mortgagor of possession of the mortgaged chattel he is liable for the reasonable value of its use, but under an agreement which gives the mortgagee possession and provides that the profits shall be paid to the mortgagor or applied to the mortgage debt, the mortgagee is not liable for the use of the chattel but only for the profits actually earned.⁹¹

A mortgagee of real estate and personalty thereon, who has lawful possession of the real estate only, is not entitled to the rent of the personal property.⁹² If the property is destroyed while in the mortgagee's possession without fault on his part, he is accountable only for the net profits accruing before the loss.⁹³ Where the title to the mortgaged property remains in the mortgagor until divested by means of a foreclosure proceeding, after default by the mortgagor the mortgagee's right to use the chattels mortgaged is, in the absence of special agreement, merely such as is incident to the foreclosure proceeding.⁹⁴ An employee who accepts his employer's chattel mortgage as trustee for himself and other employees to secure the payment of wages due is required to account to the beneficiaries for any property or money received by him under the terms or provisions of the mortgage.⁹⁵

Sale of mortgaged property. Where the mortgagee is intrusted with the sale of the chattel he is a trustee for the mortgagor rather than a bailee for sale;⁹⁶ he is more than an agent and is in the relationship of a factor requiring great care, attention, and fidelity.⁹⁷ After the sale he must account to the mortgagor for the proceeds.⁹⁸ A mortgagee in possession of a mortgaged crop who agrees to sell it when the market price recovers is not required to sell at the highest price offered irrespective of whether the offer would bring enough to pay the debt.⁹⁹

Burden on mortgagee

Where a mortgagor of cattle delivered them to the mortgagee to be sold, passing the legal title to such mortgagee, the burden was on the mortgagee to account for all the cattle so delivered, either by showing a sale of some of them and the number sold, or by showing that some had been lost by death or straying, without fraud or negligence on its part, and the number so lost.—National Cattle Loan Co. v. Ward, supra.

Where mortgagee sold the property without authority, mortgagor could recover, in action for money had and received, difference between what it sold for and amount owing on the mortgage debt.—Lineville Nat. Bank v. Weaver, 73 So. 461, 16 Ala.App. 431.

Waiver of cash payment for chattel

If the maker of a note secured by chattel mortgage on wheat had the right to cash payment for the wheat from the holder of the note, he waived it by turning the wheat over to such holder without asking or requiring the cash payment, and then making an arrangement with him about shipping it in a car with his, the maker's grain, and that of another, for sale under a trust arrangement.—*Grant v. gor rightfully in possession of the mortgaged property is entitled to the use, rents, and profits thereof.

In the absence of a stipulation otherwise, a mortgagor rightfully in possession of the mortgaged property is entitled to the use thereof free of charge,¹ and cannot be made to account either at law or in equity for the rents and profits arising out of such use,² and, in some jurisdictions, even for the period after condition broken;³ but, in a jurisdiction where the mortgagor's right to possession of the mortgaged property terminates on his failure to perform the condition, he is liable for the hire thereof after the forfeiture of the conditions of the mortgage.⁴ The fact that the security is insufficient does not change the general rule.⁵ In an action to foreclose a mortgage against the administrator of the mortgagor, it has been held that, if the proceeds of the sale should not be sufficient to discharge the debt, the administrator should be required to account for the annual hire and labor of the property during the time that it was in his possession.⁶ A mortgagee of real estate and the rents, profits, and income therefrom is entitled to all such profits and income to be applied on the mortgage debt.⁷

c. Third Person in Possession

A third person in possession under an agreement to apply the profits to the mortgage debt is liable to account for the profits received. The purchaser of the mortgagor's interest, including the right of possession, is not liable for the rental value of the property prior to the maturity of the mortgage.

A third person in possession of the mortgaged property under an agreement to apply the profits to the mortgage debt is liable to account for the profits received. The same rule applies to the personal representative of the mortgagor where the mortgage specifically pledges the rents and profits, and in such case the receipts may be reached in equity if they have been kept separate and can be distinguished from the general funds of the estate.⁸ Where a person acquires the interest of both the mortgagor and the first mortgagee and also obtains possession of the mortgaged property, he is not chargeable with the use and hire of such property prior to a demand on him by the second mortgagee who is entitled to possession.⁹ The purchaser at an execution sale of a mortgagor's interest in the property, including the right to possession, is not liable to the mortgagee for the rental value of the property prior to the maturity of the mortgage debt.¹⁰

§ 188. — Expenses Incurred and Charges against Property

A mortgagee in possession who does not assume to hold the property in his own right for his own uses is entitled to be credited with all reasonable expenses incurred in its care and management. Ordinarily, a mortgagor in possession is not entitled to reimbursement for caring for the property unless he has been employed by the mortgagee.

A mortgagee in possession of mortgaged property is entitled to be credited with all reasonable and actual expenses in caring for it,¹¹ if he does not assume to hold in his own right and for his own uses, but as bailee or trustee for the mortgagor.¹²

Salaries of employees conducting business

Where a mortgage is given on a stock of dry goods, providing that the mortgagee have possession there-

However, where the mortgagee holds adversely to the mortgagor and denies his right to redeem,¹³ or where he wrongfully seizes the property before the mortgage debt is due,¹⁴ he cannot charge the mortgagor for repairs or for the expense of keeping it, but even though, without authority, he seizes the property before default, after default he may charge the expense of keeping it until sold if the mortgage stipulates that he may reimburse himself for all expenses of taking possession and selling the property.¹⁵ Where the mortgagee is considered the owner of the chattel after taking possession on default, he can acquire no lien thereon for subsequent storage or repairs.¹⁶ A senior mortgagee of a crop who under authority of the mortgage takes possession of the crop and harvests and markets it, is entitled to reimbursement from the proceeds for his actual and reasonable expenses, and his claim takes precedence over the rights of a junior mortgagee.¹⁷ Likewise, it has been held that where the mortgagor of a farm and the crop thereon abandons possession and the mortgagee of the farm takes care of the crop, said mortgagee may be entitled to deduct his expenses incurred in the production of the crop from the proceeds thereof payable to the crop mortgagee.¹⁸

Ordinarily, the mortgagor is not entitled to reimbursement for expenses incurred by him in the management and keeping of the mortgaged chattel,¹⁹ but where the mortgagor is employed to look after the chattel he is entitled to payment for his services,²⁰ although not to payment out of the proceeds of the property in preference to the debt owing the mortgagee.²¹ Although the mortgagor is responsible for taxes,²² he does not have to allow the mortgagee the amounts of insurance premiums on the mortgaged goods in the absence of express stipulation.²³ An agreement in a chattel mortgage that the mortgagor is to pay the expenses of keeping the mortgaged property and is to have the reasonable use thereof will not impose liability on the mortgagor for the expense of the keeping of the property where he has been deprived of its use.²⁴ A mortgagee who fails to take possession will not be allowed credit for portions of the property sold by a junior mortgagee.²⁵

Where the mortgagor retains title to the chattel, he has the right to incur debt for its care and preservation without the mortgagee's authority.²⁶ In like manner, where the mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage may take care of mortgaged livestock, he is authorized to purchase feed for it

C. NECESSITY FOR TRANSFER OF POSSESSION

§ 189. In General

A retention of possession of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor will not invalidate an unrecorded mortgage as between the parties, but it will invalidate the mortgage or render it presumptively fraudulent as to other creditors.

As between the parties, authorities are agreed that a retention of possession of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor will not invalidate the mortgage.³² However, all the jurisdictions are not strictly in accord as to the effect on the rights of creditors or of bona fide purchasers.³³ Generally stated, the prevailing rule, in many jurisdictions affirmed or announced by statute, is that retention of possession of the chattel by the mortgagor renders an unrecorded mortgage invalid or fraudulent per se as to other creditors or purchasers without notice,³⁴ but in other jurisdictions it renders a

Property located in another state

A statute which requires change of possession to accompany mortgage of personalty in order to perfect title as against creditors or, or subsequent purchasers from, mortgagor, does not apply to property which mortgage presumptively fraudulent under statutes providing therefor,³⁵ and it has been so held in some jurisdictions under the common law in the absence of statute,³⁶ in which jurisdictions the presumption of fraud has been held to be removable by evidence showing the transaction to be fair and honest, and by the giving of a reasonable explanation of the retention of possession.³⁷ In like manner under the common law in some jurisdictions, it has been held that no presumption arose from the fact of retention of possession, but that such retention was to be considered simply as a circumstance bearing generally upon the question of fraud.³⁸ Retention of possession as a circumstance indicating fraud applies only to cases in which the mortgagor retains a possession which he had prior to the mortgage and not where he has possession of property which was not his before the mortgage,³⁹ and to cases in which a change of possession is practicable.⁴⁰

A mortgagee of personal property is not required to accept possession on tender thereof by the mort-

gagor unless he is bound by contract to do so or equity might require such action to be taken to prevent fraud.⁴¹

Possession consistent with terms of deed. Many of the authorities holding that the retention of possession by the mortgagor did not render the mortgage fraudulent per se recognized a distinction in this regard between absolute and conditional sales,⁴² holding that a mortgage was removed from the operation of the rule relative to absolute sales by reason of the fact that possession by the mortgagor might be regarded as consistent with the terms of the deed.⁴³ Some cases of this character held that there need not be an express provision in the mortgage to the effect that the mortgagor might retain possession until default,⁴⁴ while other cases made such a provision essential.⁴⁵ In other jurisdictions, however, there was an express refusal to recognize the distinction between absolute and conditional sales,⁴⁶ even where there was an express provision that the mortgagor should remain in possession.⁴⁷ In still other jurisdictions, the distinction was held was located in another state, where chattel mortgage was executed and was later brought into state without knowledge or consent of mortgagee.—General Credit Corporation v. Rohde, 187 A. 676, 122 Conn. 100.

Secret agreement

A chattel mortgage, given in connection with a secret agreement to keep its existence a secret for the purpose of protecting the mortgagor's credit, is fraudulent as to creditors.—Moore v. Wood, Tenn.Ch.A., 61 S.W. 1063.

Mortgage in form of sale

The presumption arising from retention of possession by vendor applies, 'in favor of creditors and purchasers,' to all transactions which are in the form of sales, but in fact mortgages or other security for the repayment of debt, unless within exceptions contained in Gen.St.1918 § 5206 authorizing the mortgagor to retain possession under certain conditions if the mortgage is recorded. Thus an agreement reciting that vendor conveyed, sold, and delivered a truck to vendee, was ineffective as against creditors or purchasers of vendor, where possession was permitted to be retained by vendor.—Adler, Salzman & Adler v. Ammerman Furniture Co., 123 A. 268, 100 Conn. 223.

Effect of general conveying clause

Where property described in corporate mortgage is not such as to make it void, it cannot be attacked by subsequent creditors on ground that general conveying clause includes property not proper to be mortgaged, possession of which is reserved to mortgagor.—Morgan Bros. v. Dayton Coal & Iron Co., 183 S.W. 1019, 134 Tenn. 228.

(2) One sufficiently proving validity of attachment of mortgaged horses and cause of action was creditor, within the statute protecting him against mortgage taken in bad faith where mortgagor remains in possession.—Glasser v. O'Brien, 215 N.W. 517, 172 Minn. 355.

not to remove the presumption of fraud but merely to render it rebuttable.⁴⁸

§ 190. Effect of Recording Acts

Generally, where the mortgage is recorded, a transfer of possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee is not necessary.

Under the recording acts generally, a transfer of possession of the mortgaged property is unnecessary where the mortgage is filed or recorded,⁴⁹ the purpose of registration being to take the place of a transfer of possession.⁵⁰ Hence, where the mortgage is filed or recorded, it is not invalidated by the fact that it contains a provision for the retention of the possession of the property by the mortgagor,⁵¹ and conversely, in some jurisdictions, where the mortgage expressly stipulates that the mortgagee shall have possession, the fact that the mortgagor retains possession will not invalidate it.⁵² A statute which provides for exceptions to the general rule requiring delivery of the property must be strictly complied with,⁵³ and when so provided by the statute, in order that the mortgagor may retain possession of the mortgaged property, it must be provided in the instrument itself that he is to retain possession.⁵⁴

The filing of a mortgage is only a substitute for the transfer of possession and it is not a protection against a secret fraud.⁵⁵

Presumption of fraud. Under the generally accepted rule, the registration of a chattel mortgage rebuts any inference of fraud which might otherwise arise from the continued possession of the grantor,⁵⁶ but in some jurisdictions the statutes, notwithstanding the recording acts, make the retention of possession by the mortgagor of the goods mortgaged prima facie evidence of fraud.⁵⁷ This presumption which arises only in favor of the persons contemplated by the statute⁵⁸ may be rebutted by proof of actual good faith,⁵⁹ and continues only as long as the mortgagor continues in possession.⁶⁰ Further, this presumption applies only to goods of which possession may be properly predicated, and not to choses in action.⁶¹ The statutory presumption against the mortgagee does not extend to his vendee, so that the latter need not prove affirmatively the good faith of the transfer in order to prevail against creditors of the mortgagor.⁶²

A failure to record the mortgage will reinstate the common-law presumption of fraud arising from retention of possession by the mortgagor,⁶³ in the absence of exceptions created by statute.⁶⁴

§ 191. Consumable and Perishable Property

Generally a mortgage of property which is consumable in its use is prima facie fraudulent if possession is reserved by the mortgagor and invalid or fraudulent per se if the right to use such property is also reserved.

While there are some authorities to the effect that articles subject in their nature to be consumed in their use may be mortgaged without any imputation of fraud,⁶⁵ and conversely it has been held that some property may be so transient in its nature that it cannot be mortgaged,⁶⁶ the general rule is that a mortgage of property which is consumable in its use is prima facie fraudulent, if possession is reserved by the mortgagor,⁶⁷ and that it is invalid or fraudulent per se if the right to use such property is also reserved.⁶⁸ The fact that the mortgagor is allowed to use property consumable in the use conveyed in the mortgage may likewise be conclusive proof of fraud where no permission for such use appears on the face of the mortgage.⁶⁹ However, it has been said that the rule must be applied, if possible, in a reasonable manner,⁷⁰ and it has been held that a mortgage is not fraudulent on its face because of the fact that it includes a relatively small portion of perishable or consumable property of which the mortgagor is allowed to retain the use.⁷¹ So, where the mortgage is on personalty not necessarily consumable in its use, it will not be held invalid unless it appears from the instrument, taken as a whole, that the reservation is inconsistent with the purposes of the instrument and for the benefit and advantage of the grantor.⁷²

According to one line of authorities where the mortgagor is allowed to remain in the possession and use of property, a part of which is consumable, the mortgage is invalid as a whole,⁷³ but under other authorities it is invalid only as to the consumable property.⁷⁴

Exempt property. An agreement permitting a mortgagor, a farmer, to use sufficient property covered by the mortgage for the actual subsistence of his family, such property being exempt under the statute, does not invalidate the mortgage.⁷⁵

Use of property for benefit of mortgagee. The rule that the mortgage is rendered fraudulent in law because of an agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the mortgagor may apply the mortgaged property to his own use is not applicable to a case where property is applied to the benefit of the mortgagee,⁷⁶ although it has been held that, where a mortgage covered cattle and grain, a permission to the mortgagor to use the grain in feeding the stock was in effect a provision allowing the consumption of the grain for the mortgagor's benefit, and fraudulent.⁷⁷

The mortgagee is only required to take possession before any adverse rights attach to the property, but to cut off possible intervening creditors he must take possession at the time of the execution of the mortgage.

he must take possession at the time of the execution of the mortgage,⁷⁹ for, where the mortgagor has been allowed to retain possession, the mortgagee, by subsequently taking possession, cannot validate his mortgage as to creditors whose rights have intervened.⁸⁰ The requirement for an immediate change of possession is satisfied by a transfer as soon as it can reasonably be made.⁸¹

§ 193. Transfer of Part of Property

Ordinarily in the absence of statute delivery to the mortgagee of part of the property included in the mortgage will render it valid as to the part delivered.

Delivery to the mortgagee of part of the property included in a mortgage will ordinarily render it valid as to the part delivered;⁸² but under a statute declaring a mortgage void without delivery, transfer of part of the property has been held insufficient, and the mortgage was held void even as to that part which was delivered.⁸³

The mortgagee, to preserve his lien against intervening rights, must take possession of the mortgaged property within a reasonable time after default.

A chattel mortgage is not, unless the statute so provides, void merely because the mortgagor is allowed to retain possession of the property after default,⁸⁴ but such possession may be prima facie evidence of fraud,⁸⁵ at least where unreasonably prolonged;⁸⁶ and in some jurisdictions it is a fraud per se to allow the property covered by a chattel mortgage to remain in the hands of the mortgagor for an unreasonable time after default.⁸⁷ Hence the mortgagee must use due diligence and take possession within a reasonable time after default, otherwise he may lose his lien against intervening rights.⁸⁸ What constitutes a reasonable time must depend on the circumstances of each case,⁸⁹ unless the time is fixed by statute.⁹⁰ It has likewise been held fraudulent to allow the property to remain in the mortgagor's hands after sale on foreclosure.⁹¹ The rule requiring the mortgagee to take possession within a reasonable time after default does not, however, apply as between the parties,⁹² or as against a purchaser from the mortgagor before maturity,⁹³ or as against the personal representatives of a deceased mortgagor,⁹⁴ or the divorced wife of a mortgagor,⁹⁵ or generally to those standing in the same relation to the mortgagee as the mortgagor.⁹⁶

The institution of foreclosure proceedings with reasonable diligence rebuts any presumption of fraud arising from retention of possession by the mortgagor after default.⁹⁷

Junior mortgagee. Until maturity of a junior mortgage the junior mortgagee can derive no advantage from the delay of the first mortgagee to foreclose;⁹⁸ it is sufficient if the senior mortgagee actually takes possession before the junior mortgagee does;⁹⁹ but it has been held that after the expiration of the time for taking possession has elapsed, one of several successive mortgagees who first acquires possession is entitled to hold it.¹ So a second mortgagee who takes possession as soon as his debt is due will be preferred to a first mortgagee who has permitted the debtor to retain the property for an unreasonable time, or longer than the time fixed by statute, after his debt matured.²

Breach of stipulation by mortgagor. The requirement that the mortgagee take possession after default does not apply upon breach of a stipulation in the mortgage by the mortgagor before maturity of the debt.³

§ 195. Retention of Possession as Agent of Mortgagee

The mortgagor may retain possession as agent for the mortgagee.

It cannot be said as matter of law that the mortgagor can never retain possession as agent for the mortgagee.⁴

§ 196. Return of Possession to Mortgagor

After the title of the mortgagee has become absolute after default or after foreclosure, he may return possession of the property to the former mortgagor without prejudice to his rights as to creditors of the mortgagor, but such action is a circumstance from which fraud may be determined.

After the title of the mortgagee has been made absolute by foreclosure, there seems to be no objection to a return of the property into the custody of the former mortgagor,⁵ although it has been held that, while such an act does not amount to a fraud in fact,⁶ it is a badge of fraud,⁷ and a circumstance from which the jury may determine actual fraud.⁸ Where the mortgagee has taken possession after default, and has retained it for a time long enough to advise all parties of the change of ownership, the effect of his taking possession is not destroyed by the fact that he subsequently allows the property to pass into the possession of the mortgagor.⁹ Where a mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged chattels before any other right or lien attaches, and his title thus becomes good against all the world, it has been held that he may lend or hire such chattels to the mortgagor for occasional or temporary use without prejudice to his security.¹⁰ Where, on default in some of a series of notes secured by a chattel mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession for the purpose of enforcing a payment of the amount due, he does not, by acceptance of payment of the notes which have matured, and by releasing the property to the mortgagor, destroy his lien for deferred payments not yet due.¹¹ It has also been held that it is not conclusive of fraud for a mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property to deliver the same to the mortgagor for the purpose of private sale, and to account for the proceeds; nor will his security be destroyed by such act, even though the sale of the mortgaged property is not conducted in the manner provided in the mortgage.¹²

Trust receipts. Where the mortgagee returns the chattels to the mortgagor and takes trust receipts from him, he cannot assert a lien as against creditors of the mortgagor.¹³

§ 197. Questions for Jury

Questions of fact as to such matters as fraud, retention of possession, and the reasonableness of the time within which the mortgagee has taken possession are for the jury.

The question of actual fraud in retention of possession should be submitted to a jury,¹⁴ and where there is a valid consideration for the mortgage the retention of possession by the mortgagor need not be explained in order that the question of fraud be submitted to the jury.¹⁵ Even in those states where the retention of possession is fraudulent per se, the question of whether possession was retained must be submitted to the jury.¹⁶ The finding of the jury on the question of fraud is conclusive,¹⁷ except where the court is justified in granting a new trial.¹⁸

The question as to whether the mortgagee has taken possession within a reasonable time after the execution of the mortgage is for the jury.¹⁹

§ 198. Waiver or Estoppel

A creditor waives the necessity of a transfer of possession by extending credit when he has actual knowledge of the mortgage.

§ 202. In General

Where the mortgagor is permitted to remain in possession and sell the chattel, applying the proceeds to his own use, it is variously held that the mortgage is fraudulent per se or that it is presumptively void or that fraud is a question of fact.

Where the mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession of the property, with power to sell it and to apply the proceeds to his own use, the general rule, in many instances affirmed or announced by statute, is that the transaction is fraudulent and void as to creditors,²¹ without regard to the actual intent of the parties.²² This has been held to be true, although the permission to sell extends only to a portion of the property,²³ but there is other authority that the mortgage may be valid as to property that is not permitted to be sold.²⁴ In some jurisdictions, such a transaction is merely presumptively void,²⁵ and in others the question of fraud is one of fact from all of the evidence.²⁶ As between the parties the mortgage is not invalidated by an agreement permitting the mortgagor to sell,²⁷ nor is it invalidated as to a third person whose claim is not based on a valuable consideration.²⁸

Application of proceeds to mortgage debt. An agreement that the mortgagor may sell the mortgaged property and apply the proceeds on the mortgage debt is not fraudulent per se,²⁹ but may be shown to be fraudulent by evidence aliunde.³⁰ So, a mortgage is not necessarily fraudulent because the mortgagee fails to sell in the manner pointed out in the mortgage, and permits the mortgagor to sell at a private sale and to account for the proceeds.³¹ A permission to the mortgagor to sell the property at public sale, and to pay over the proceeds to the mortgagee, will not render the mortgage void as to creditors.³²

Necessity of agreement. A sale by the mortgagor without the consent of the mortgagee will not invalidate the mortgage,³³ but the consent to sell need not be incorporated in the mortgage,³⁴ and it may be implied.³⁵ Where the mortgaged articles do not constitute a stock of goods, permission to the mortgagor to use and enjoy them does not imply a power of sale rendering the mortgage void as to creditors.³⁶ A stipulation which will invalidate the mortgage if incorporated in it will have the same effect on its validity if otherwise agreed to at the time the mortgage is given.³⁷ Where a sale is permitted subject to conditions which show the mortgage to be bona fide, the mortgage will not be held fraudulent per se.³⁸

Sale and replacement. The fact that the mortgagor retains possession and exchanges some of the chattels for others of equal or greater value does not render the mortgage invalid,³⁹ and an agreement between a mortgagee and a mortgagor, by which the mortgagor may sell a part of the mortgaged property, and, with the proceeds, purchase other property of like kind, to be secured by the mortgage in lieu of that sold, is not void as between the parties.⁴⁰ Where, however, the recorded mortgage does not provide for replacements, the mortgage as to the replaced chattels, is invalid as to creditors.⁴¹ Where the mortgaged property is employed in a business from the nature of which it is subject to wear and tear and to the necessity of replacement, a provision in the mortgage permitting the mortgagor to sell or dispose of property which may become worn or damaged or unsuitable to be used in the conduct of the business, provided that property equivalent in value is substituted therefor, is not fraudulent as to creditors.⁴²

Trust receipt. Where a bank becomes the owner of property purchased for another by virtue of advancing funds for that purpose and taking the bill of lading in its own name, the delivery of the property to the real purchaser against a trust receipt reserving title and providing that the proceeds of sale shall be applied to the repayment of advances made by the bank does not constitute a loss or waiver of its rights,⁴³ even though the bank delivers the property before it receives the trust receipt, or fails to insist on immediate payment of the proceeds when the goods are sold.⁴⁴ The use of trust receipts has become so common as to lead the courts to modify in some particulars the policy underlying the statute of frauds, by which the divorce of title from possession is declared either evidence of fraud or fraudulent per se,⁴⁵ and to resort to the doctrine that possession in one person, which is consistent with an agreement between the parties, is not inconsistent with the actual title in another, which will be supported for the purposes stated in the contract.⁴⁶ The rights and title of the bank in transactions of this character have been recognized and upheld against one to whom the purchaser attempted to pledge the goods,⁴⁷ the claim of a bailee holding the property for an antecedent debt,⁴⁸ the claim of an assignee for the benefit of creditors,⁴⁹ or the claim of a trustee in bankruptcy.⁵⁰

Where the mortgagor is permitted to retain possession and to make sales from a mortgaged stock in trade without accounting for the proceeds, the transaction is variously regarded as fraudulent per se, as presumptively fraudulent, or as amounting to a circumstance of fraud as to creditors and bona fide purchasers, but it is valid as between the parties.

Under the more generally accepted rule, in a number of jurisdictions embodied in an express statute, when the mortgagor of a stock in trade is permitted by the mortgagee to remain in possession and to make sales therefrom in the ordinary course of business, applying the proceeds to his own use if he see fit, the transaction is fraudulent per se or invalid as to creditors and purchasers without notice,⁵¹ without regard to the actual intent of the Statute as declaration of common law

A statute in conformity with the parties to defraud;⁵² but in a number of jurisdictions, likewise under express statutes in some instances, such a mortgage is regarded merely as presumptively fraudulent as to creditors,⁵³ or, under another line of authorities, not even presumptively fraudulent, but the permission to retain possession and to sell is simply to be considered in connection with other attendant facts and circumstances in determining whether there is fraud in fact.⁵⁴ The general rule, where adopted, applies whether the permission to sell is express or implied,⁵⁵ oral or written,⁵⁶ or whether it appears from the face of the mortgage,⁵⁷ or is the result of a collateral agreement;⁵⁸ but where the permission does not appear on the face of the mortgage, the instrument cannot be declared fraudulent per se, but the existence of the agreement to retain possession and to sell, applying the proceeds to the mortgagor's use, must be established as a question of fact.⁵⁹ The general rule has been held not to apply to a bona fide deed of trust wherein the stock in trade is only a small proportion of the total property which is the subject of the trust, and permitting sales from the stock supports the trust.⁶⁰ Likewise, purchase-text has been held to be but a declaration of the common law.—Trice v. American Trust & Savings Bank of El Paso, Tex.Civ.App., 259 S.W. 993.

Statute strictly construed

Tex.—Laredo Nat. Bank v. Steinhart, Civ.App., 15 S.W.2d 130.

Object of statute proscribing placing of mortgage or other lien on merchandise offered daily for sale to retail trade is to enable public to purchase merchandise at retail with assurance that their title will be unencumbered by creditors' claims.—Sinkin v. Butler Bros., Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 298.

Necessity for mortgage of entire stock

It is not necessary that the entire stock be mortgaged to bring the case under the statute.—Rhea Mortg. Co. v. Lemmerman, Tex.Civ.App., 294 S.W. 959, affirmed, Com.App., 10 S.W.2d 690.

Notice to existing creditors

A mortgage of fixtures and merchandise not complying with law requiring mortgagor to furnish a cost inventory and a list of creditors, and mortgagee to give notice to each creditor of the intended mortgage, is void as against creditors.—In re Laureate Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 294 F. 668.

Motor vehicles

Motor vehicles are goods, wares, and merchandise, within the rule of the common law or statutes.—First Nat. Bank v. Thompson, Tex.Com. App., 265 S.W. 884, affirming, Civ. App., 251 S.W. 818—Industrial Acceptance Corporation v. Corey, Tex. Civ.App., 19 S.W.2d 365, affirmed, Com.App., 29 S.W.2d 978—*Employers' Casualty Co. v. Mortgage of wheat held for manufacture into flour is not void, under a statute concerning mortgages on goods, wares, and merchandise exposed for sale.—In re Ballard, D.C. Tex., 279 F. 574.

Interest in partnership

The rule does not apply to a mortgage on an interest in a partnership, even though the partners remain in possession, buying and selling and disposing of stock of goods.—Ellis Jones Drug Co. v. Coker, 117 So. 545, 151 Miss. 102, 59 A.L.R. 285.

Conveyance in trust

Chattel mortgage given to secure note not intended to create relation of borrower and lender, and which gave mortgagor unlimited power to sell mortgaged property for own purposes, is conveyance in trust for mortgagor, and invalid as to creditors of mortgagor.—Harris v. Schnitzer, 27 P.2d 1010, 146 Or. 391.

Evidence

In a suit to foreclose a mortgage on a stock of goods, attacked as fraudulent, the evidence was held to show that the mortgaged property was intended by both parties to be used in the mortgagor's business.—Gray & Dudley Hardware Co. v. Guthrie, 75 So. 318, 200 Ala. 6.

However, it has been said to be generally held that a chattel mortgage on stock of merchandise is fraudulent if mortgagor is indebted to other creditors at time of execution of mortgage, and if he does not retain property sufficient to satisfy those creditors, or if mortgagor is not required to account for proceeds derived from sale in satisfaction of mortgage.—Wagner v. Peace, D.C.N.C., 5 F.Supp. 899.

Rebuttal of presumption

Presumption mortgage on stock of merchandise sold in course of trade was fraudulent must be rebutted by proof of no pre-existing debts or of sufficient other assets to pay debts.—In re Joseph, D.C.N.C., 43 F.2d 252—11 C.J. p 576 note 88 [a], [b].

Successful attack by preexisting creditor

If preexisting creditor successfully assails mortgage on a stock of merchandise as a fraudulent conveyance, it is void as to both preexisting and subsequent creditors.—In re Joseph, supra.

After-acquired property

Under Indiana law, if an agreement exists by which chattel mortgagor can sell mortgaged goods and divert proceeds from business or mortgagor does so with knowledge of mortgagee, no valid lien attaches to after-acquired property.—In re Turley, C.C.A.Ind., 92 F.2d 944.

money mortgages are in some jurisdictions made an exception to the general rule.⁶¹ In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the recording of a mortgage on a stock in trade is not equivalent to the taking of possession by the mortgagee.⁶²

A mortgage of the nature under discussion is not invalid as between the parties,⁶³ or as to junior mortgagees who take expressly subject to the mortgage.⁶⁴ A voluntary assignee for the benefit of creditors cannot, in those jurisdictions in which he is regarded as standing in the place of the mortgagor, assert the invalidity of such a mortgage,⁶⁵ but a trustee in bankruptcy representing general creditors may take advantage of such invalidity.⁶⁶

Effect on subsequent mortgage. The fact that a mortgage on a stock of goods is void as to other creditors of the mortgagor, because it authorizes the mortgagor to sell the property and to use the proceeds in his business, does not affect the right of the mortgagor to give another mortgage to secure the debt, free from such infirmity.⁶⁷

§ 204. — Necessity and Sufficiency of Agreement Permitting Sale

In order that sales from a stock in trade may invalidate the mortgage as to third persons, the sales must be with the express or implied consent of the mortgagee.

In order that sales by the mortgagor in the usual course of business, from a mortgaged stock in trade, for his own use and benefit may invalidate the mortgage as to third persons, they must be with the agreement and consent of the mortgagee,⁶⁸ although such agreement may be implied from the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction⁶⁹ or from the terms of the mortgage.⁷⁰ Such an agreement cannot be implied from the mere character of the mortgaged property as merchandise,⁷¹ and, although there are decisions to the effect that permission to retain possession and use and enjoy a stock of goods implies a power of sale,⁷² there is other authority to the contrary.⁷³

a. In General

Generally, a mortgage of a stock in trade is not regarded as fraudulent per se where the proceeds are to be applied on the mortgage debt, but in some jurisdictions such a mortgage is void or presumptively fraudulent.

According to the great weight of authority, a mortgage is not fraudulent in law by reason of the fact that the mortgagor is left in possession of the mortgaged property with power to sell the same in the course of business in effect as agent or trustee for the mortgagee and is under the duty to account for and to pay over the proceeds in reduction of the mortgage debt.⁷⁴ This rule is obviously applicable to cases in which the stipulation for such accounting and payment by the mortgagor is contained in the mortgage,⁷⁵ and in some jurisdictions is limited to such cases;⁷⁶ but in other jurisdictions the arrangement may be established by evidence aliunde,⁷⁷ or it may be assumed upon compliance with certain statutory requisites.⁷⁸ The good faith of such a transaction is its controlling feature and is a question of fact.⁷⁹ Further such a mortgage may be shown to be fraudulent in fact,

although it provides that the proceeds of the goods are to be applied in reduction of the debt, where by extrinsic evidence it is shown that there is an agreement between the parties that the mortgagor may apply the proceeds to his own use,⁸⁰ or that the mortgagee does not enforce the provision for accounting.⁸¹ In some jurisdictions, notwithstanding an agreement to account for the proceeds, a mortgage providing that the mortgagor shall retain possession and sell the mortgaged goods in the ordinary course of business is void as to creditors,⁸² and in other jurisdictions it is presumptively fraudulent.⁸³

Under a statute making fraud a question of fact, a provision in a chattel mortgage authorizing the mortgagor to sell the mortgaged property and to apply the proceeds to the payment of the mortgage debt does not vitiate the mortgage,⁸⁴ and this rule applies where a parol agreement is made embodying the same provision.⁸⁵

Where the mortgage requires the mortgagor to apply the proceeds of sales to the payment of a prior mortgage debt, the second mortgagee will not lose his lien by the fact that the mortgagor fails to carry out the agreement when he has not consented to or permitted the misappropriation of the proceeds.⁸⁶

b. Deduction from Total Proceeds Generally

A provision permitting the mortgagor to apply the proceeds to the debt in part only has been held not to invalidate the mortgage as a matter of law, but there is other authority to the contrary.

The validity of a mortgage on a stock in trade which permits the mortgagee to apply the proceeds from sales in part only to the mortgage debt has been held to depend on the form of the arrangement and its good faith,⁸⁷ but there is some authority which holds it to be fraudulent per se and void as to creditors.⁸⁸ In particular instances a mortgage has been held void where the mortgagor was required to apply only half the proceeds;⁸⁹ or to apply only the wholesale price of that sold;⁹⁰ or to apply only the surplus, after deducting the expenses of carrying on the business,⁹¹ or a sum for his support or support of his family;⁹² or where he was permitted to retain surplus proceeds above certain installments.⁹³ On the other hand a mortgage has been held not invalidated by the fact that the mortgagor was allowed to deduct from the proceeds of sale a sum for his living expenses,⁹⁴ and provisions allowing the mortgagor compensation for his services in making sales have also been upheld.⁹⁵

c. Application of Amount of Proceeds Not Paid Over

Although the proceeds are not paid over to the mortgagee, as against third persons they will be regarded as applied to the mortgage debt.

Where the mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession and to sell the mortgaged property for the purpose of applying the proceeds to the mortgage debt, he is held to act as the agent or trustee of the mortgagee,⁹⁶ and the proceeds of sale will, as against third persons, be regarded as applied and the debt pro tanto extinguished, although they may not in fact have been paid over to the mortgagee.⁹⁷ This rule, however, does not apply between the mortgagor and the mortgagee.⁹⁸ Where a second mortgagee makes sales from the mortgaged stock, the proceeds will not be held to be applied to the first mortgage debt, where the first mortgagee has not consented to the sales and the proceeds are not paid over to him.⁹⁹ Where a mortgage, covering a stock of goods and fixtures, contained provisions for the payment of the necessary expenses of operating the store, the mortgagee is entitled, as against the creditors of the mortgagor, to an allowance for the amount paid for fixtures which are reasonably necessary to the operation of the store.¹ Where the mortgagee requires regular payments to be made, but not an accounting which is necessary to make the mortgage valid against general creditors, he may be charged with the amount of sales made on credit but he is entitled to the lien of his mortgage for the balance of the debt where there is no other misapplication of proceeds.²

d. Sale on Credit

The mortgagor may be allowed to sell on credit if the permission is granted in good faith.

When the mortgage is otherwise valid it has been held that the mortgagor may be allowed to sell on reasonable terms as to credit,³ if the permission is granted in good faith,⁴ and not as a means of keeping other creditors at bay.⁵

§ 206. — Sale and Replenishment of Stock

A mortgage on a stock of goods has been held not invalidated by the fact that the mortgagor is authorized to replenish the stock from the proceeds of the sales although there is authority to the contrary. As between the parties the mortgage is valid.

Under one line of decisions a mortgage of a stock in trade is not invalidated by the fact that the mortgagor is authorized to sell and to replenish the stock from the proceeds of the sales,⁶ especially when there is a provision that any surplus shall be applied to the mortgage debt,⁷ but under another line of authorities such a mortgage is fraudulent and void,⁸ and a mortgage which is valid on its face is invalidated by a collateral permission to this effect.⁹

As between the parties the mortgage is valid¹⁰ and it may be upheld as to the after-acquired property.¹¹

§ 207. — Partial Invalidity

Where a portion only of the property is covered by a power of sale, the general rule is that the mortgage is not void in its entirety, but there is other authority to the contrary.

Where a portion only of the mortgaged property is covered by the power of sale the mortgage, although it may be held fraudulent and void as to the property with respect to which the power of sale exists, is not, according to the weight of authority, void in its entirety,¹² although in several jurisdictions a contrary rule prevails.¹³ For example, a mortgage of a stock and fixtures may, in some jurisdictions, be held void as to the stock and valid as to the fixtures,¹⁴ and in other jurisdictions void in toto.¹⁵ ly payments to the mortgagee as required and talked over his business in a general way, but made no statement in writing with relation to the sales of the mortgaged stock, shows a breach of the provision of the mortgage that the mortgagor should account to the mortgagee for sales of stock and apply the proceeds thereof to satisfaction of the mortgage.—In re McLean, supra.

E. SUFFICIENCY OF TRANSFER OF POSSESSION

Ordinarily, a transfer of possession to be sufficient must be actual, visible, unequivocal, and substantial, so as to advise third persons of the change.

Ordinarily, a change of possession to be sufficient as such must be an actual transfer of possession and control,¹⁶ the question depending largely on the character and situation of the property.¹⁷ Mere words will not effect a change of possession in law when there is none in fact.¹⁸ The possession taken must be visible, unequivocal, and substantial, and such as to advise the world at large of the change.¹⁹ Some sort of continued custody in behalf of the mortgagee is essential, even though the property is in the open.²⁰ No particular ceremony or formality is required,²¹ and a delivery of possession which would answer in the case of an absolute sale is sufficient.²² The possession of the mortgagee must be exclusive,²³ and it should be continuous.²⁴ When the mortgagee comes into the lawful possession of the goods, his rights are perfected, although he does not receive possession through the agency of the mortgagor.²⁵ The question of whether possession has been taken by a mortgagee is, on conflicting evidence, one of fact.²⁶ Where the mortgagee has possession at the time of the execution of the mortgage, no further acts of delivery are necessary.²⁷

The possession of a receiver does not constitute a reduction to possession by a mortgagee, for the possession of the receiver is the possession of the court.²⁸

On default. A delivery and change of possession which would be sufficient as against creditors and purchasers on a sale of chattels will be sufficient on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage. In determining the sufficiency of the taking of possession on default, it is proper to consider the situation and nature of the property, and all the circumstances attending the transaction. Thus, what would be sufficient in the case of articles which are ponderous and unwieldy would not be effective in the case of articles which are light and portable.²⁹

§ 209. Constructive Delivery and Change of Possession

Ordinarily, a constructive delivery is insufficient unless an actual delivery is impossible or impractical.

Ordinarily, a constructive delivery is regarded as insufficient,³⁰ particularly under statutes requiring an actual and continued change of possession.³¹ A symbolical delivery, however, will be permitted where the property is of such a bulky character as not readily to permit of an actual delivery,³² so that it is sufficient for the mortgagee to accept a constructive delivery of the property and then continue his control over it by means of a custodian or keeper,³³ or by retaining the key to the room where the property is stored.³⁴ However, even in the case of such articles, there must be such a clear and unequivocal designation thereof that creditors or subsequent purchasers cannot be misled, or be in doubt as to the nature of the transaction.³⁵ Again a symbolical or constructive delivery may be permitted where the property is so situated that an actual delivery is impossible or impractical,³⁶ as where the chattels are at a great distance.³⁷ In the nature of things the requirements as to actual, visible change of possession cannot apply to property that has only a potential existence, such as the increase of animals.³⁸ The pendency of a foreclosure suit does not accomplish a constructive change of possession.³⁹

§ 210. Property in Hands of Third Person

Generally, where the property is in the hands of a third person not holding for the mortgagor, an actual delivery is not required.

Where the mortgaged property is in the hands of a third person holding adversely to the mortgagor, so that no better delivery can be made, the mortgage may be good without an actual delivery.⁴⁰

The same rule is applied to cases where the property is in the possession of a bailee of the mortgagor,⁴¹ and it has been held applicable under statutory provisions requiring the actual and continued transfer of possession, where the possessor of the property is an independent party,⁴² but not where he is a tenant or successor in title of the mortgagor.⁴³ So, where the property is in the hands of a third person holding for the mortgagor, a notice by the mortgagor to him to hold the property for the mortgagee is sufficient.⁴⁴ Such a notice is generally necessary,⁴⁵ although there are cases to the contrary.⁴⁶ The consent of the agent or the bailee to hold for the mortgagee is unnecessary.⁴⁷

§ 211. Taking and Retaining Possession Through Agent

The mortgagee may take and retain possession through an agent, but the mortgagor, or one in his employ, is generally regarded as incompetent to act as such agent.

If the mortgagee takes and retains possession through the medium of an agent, in such a manner as to indicate an intention of depriving the mortgagor of his apparent ownership and possession, it is sufficient to protect the property from the claims of third parties.⁴⁸ The agent must have authority to act for his principal in the premises,⁴⁹ and must not act in his own interest or behalf.⁵⁰

Who may be agents. Although it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the mortgagor can never retain possession as agent for the mortgagee,⁵¹ he is generally regarded as incompetent to act as agent in accepting a delivery of the property,⁵² at least as long as he retains his interest in the property.⁵³ One in possession who is not in the employ of the mortgagor may be appointed a custodian for the mortgagee,⁵⁴ but it is usually insufficient for the mortgagee to retain possession through a servant or an employee of the mortgagor,⁵⁵ although there is no objection to having the same clerks or salesmen continue their previous employment,⁵⁶ and the mortgagee may even retain the mortgagor to assist him in the sale of the mortgaged property.⁵⁷ Where the mortgagee has taken possession of a stock of goods by his agent, the fact that the sign of the mortgagors is allowed to remain over the place of business is not fatal to the sufficiency of taking of possession,⁵⁸ nor is the fact that the same books of accounting are used.⁵⁹

F. DEFECTS CURED BY TAKING POSSESSION

Minor defects or informalities attending a mortgage may be cured by the mortgagee's taking possession of the property.

Where a mortgage is valid as between the parties, it will be good as against third persons notwithstanding minor defects or informalities attending it, where possession has been taken before their rights have accrued,⁶⁰ as, for example, where it is attended by defects in its formal execution⁶¹ or acknowledgment,⁶² or in the accompanying affidavit,⁶³ or in recording,⁶⁴ or where it is absolute on its face,⁶⁵ or amounts merely to an executory contract,⁶⁶ or fails to follow the statutory form,⁶⁷ or is verbal,⁶⁸ or gives the mortgagee a power to sell at private sale,⁶⁹ or where the note secured fails to state that it is secured by chattel mortgage.⁷⁰ However, possession taken after rights of creditors have become fixed can detract nothing from the rights of such creditors.⁷¹ A mortgage which is intrinsically void as a fraud on creditors cannot be cured by taking possession.⁷²

gee's taking of possession before adverse rights attach, although there is authority to the contrary.

Where the mortgage contains a stipulation regarding the use or disposition of the property which would render it invalid against creditors, it has been held that such invalidity will be cured by a transfer of possession to the mortgagee before adverse rights attach to the property;⁷³ but a contrary view is held in some jurisdictions,⁷⁴ and the rule does not apply where the mortgagee holds the possession of the goods under a mortgage which is found to be actually fraudulent; that is, where it was executed for the express purpose of cheating or defrauding the creditors of the mortgagor.⁷⁵ Where the mortgagee has in good faith, and for the purpose of satisfying a bona fide indebtedness secured by the mortgage, taken possession and foreclosed the mortgage in due form, the property cannot be pursued by creditors into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for full value at the foreclosure sale.⁷⁶

G. CONVERSION OF, OR INJURY TO, PROPERTY

§ 214. By Mortgagor

A wrongful exercise of dominion over the mortgaged property by the mortgagor with intent to deprive the mortgagee thereof constitutes a conversion.

Where the mortgagor wrongfully appropriates the mortgaged chattels to his own use, he is liable for conversion.⁷⁷ In order to constitute a conversion, the acts of the mortgagor must amount to an exercise of dominion over the mortgaged goods with intent to deprive the mortgagee thereof,⁷⁸ as where he denies the mortgagee's interest in the property after a default in the condition of the mortgage,⁷⁹ or changes the form of mortgaged property,⁸⁰ or sells the property in denial of the mortgagee's interest, see infra § 261. So, a mortgagor may be liable to a first mortgagee for conversion where he gives another mortgage and permits the second mortgagee to take possession.⁸¹ The mere refusal of the mortgagor to consent to the mortgagee's taking possession of the mortgaged chattels, pursuant to the terms in the mortgage, on breach of its conditions, is not sufficient to constitute a conversion.⁸²

(2) The former rule was otherwise.—Durr v. Wildish, 84 N.W. 437, 108 Wis. 401—Blakeslee v. Rossman, 43 Wis. 116.

(3) However, where the mortgagor of stock of goods, permitted by mortgage to make sales, fails to file statement of sales as required by St. 1923 § 2316b, and mortgagee permits fifteen days after expiration of time for filing to elapse without action on his part, as against other creditors, he must be deemed to have lost lien for all time, although he subsequently takes possession.—Thomas Pro-

Oral agreement permitting sale

At common law, unless third person's rights intervene, mortgagee's seasonably taking possession of mortgaged cattle validates, as against all persons, oral agreement permitting mortgagor to sell mortgaged cattle if he replaces them.—Paska v. Saunders, 153 A. 451, 103 Vt. 204.

Mortgagee mindful of creditor's claims

Fact that lender who took chattel mortgage on fluctuating stock as security, when he took possession under stipulation of mortgage and proceeded to sell at private sale, was not unmindful of claims of unsecured creditors and proposed to get all he could for them, did not lessen nor defeat his security.—Kenney v. Hurlburt, 172 P. 490, 88 Or. 688, L.R.A.1918E 652, Ann.Cas.1918E 737, modified on other grounds 173 P. 158, 88 Or. 688, L.R.A.1918E 652, Ann.Cas.1918E 737.

Claims without attachment or seizure

Mere existence of claims of creditors of mortgagor without attachment or seizure on execution was not intervention of rights of third persons, preventing subjection of goods to lien of chattel mortgage on mortgagee's taking possession before rights of third persons intervened.—*Kenney v. § 215. By Mortgagee

- a. In general
- b. By senior mortgagee
- c. By junior mortgagee

a. In General

An exercise of dominion over the property by the mortgagee inconsistent with the rights of the mortgagor or the relationship between the parties will constitute a conversion.

Where the mortgagee is in possession, the exercise by him of any dominion over the property, inconsistent with the rights of the mortgagor or with the relation which he justly sustains to the property, will constitute a conversion in case the mortgagor elects so to treat it;⁸³ and this is true, even though the mortgagee is not actually in possession, if he exercises acts of dominion over the property and participates by aiding and abetting one in actual possession.⁸⁴ So a mortgagee is liable for conversion where he wrongfully takes or retains possession,⁸⁵ or is guilty of fraud or breach of the peace in obtaining possession,⁸⁶ or where he disposes of the property in denial of the title or interest of the mortgagor,⁸⁷ as where he sells without foreclosure, when foreclosure is required by the statute or terms of the mortgage,⁸⁸ where he sells under the mort-

Retention by purchase-money mortgagee after return for repair

Where buyer of piano, who had a purchase-money mortgage, shipped piano back to seller's factory for repairs under seller's agreement to make repairs without cost and return the piano to buyer, the seller could not retain the piano because of buyer's default in payment of purchase-money installments when due, but was required to foreclose the mortgage in the regular way, and such retention amounted to a conversion.—*Cable Co. v. Sale contrary to agreement

Where automobile buyer in default on purchase-money note secured by mortgage surrendered possession to seller's agent who agreed in writing to hold automobile for ten days and to deliver it to buyer upon payment of installments due and expense item incurred by seller, sale of automobile during ten-day period by seller was a "conversion."—*Draper v. Sale while action pending

(1) A mortgagee is liable for conversion for selling personal property pledged to it under chattel mortgage while action in claim and delivery is pending, since the property is technically in possession of the law.—United Bank & Trust Co. of California v. Hunt, 64 P.2d 477, 18 Cal. App.2d 112, amending and denying rehearing 62 P.2d 1391, 18 Cal.App.2d 112.

Proceedings after sequestration

Where seller of motorcycle took chattel mortgage thereon from buyer and on failure to pay installment instituted suit and sequestered machine, and later replevied it, his dismissal of sequestration suit did not relieve him of conditions of replevy bond so as to permit him to sell machine to himself under power of sale in chattel mortgage without rendering himself liable to buyer for conversion.—*Trehan v. Effect of consent to taking

gage but not in accordance with its terms,⁸⁹ where he forecloses before the debt is due,⁹⁰ where proceedings as to sale or foreclosure do not comply with the statute,⁹¹ where he sells more than sufficient of the property to satisfy the mortgage debt,⁹² or if he fails to account for surplus money arising on the sale,⁹³ where he does not use all fair and reasonable means to obtain the best price at the sale⁹⁴ or sells under a void mortgage,⁹⁵ or after a release⁹⁶ or a satisfaction⁹⁷ of the mortgage, or after notice that his mortgagor had no title or interest in the chattels.⁹⁸ It also constitutes conversion for the mortgagee to receive and sell the mortgaged chattels after the debt and mortgage have been assigned.⁹⁹ Likewise the taking possession¹ and sale² of property not covered by the mortgage is a conversion thereof. A wrongful refusal to allow the mortgagor to redeem the mortgaged chattels constitutes a conversion,³ as does a refusal to restore possession after the mortgagor has redeemed.⁴

A mortgagee who wrongfully takes possession cannot escape liability by parting with his interest in the property,⁵ nor will a subsequent default by the mortgagor justify his acts.⁶ A mortgagor need sented to the taking of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee, where he did not waive foreclosure, and the statute was not followed as to notice or public sale, the mortgagee was liable to account for the reasonable value of the property.—Schreiner v. Shanahan, 181 N.W. 536 105 Neb. 525.

Private sale after election to foreclose

Finance company which procured possession of automobile mortgaged to it through suit and a receiver is guilty of conversion in thereafter treating automobile as its own and disposing of it at private sale, notwithstanding mortgage authorized them to take possession of and sell automobile at private sale upon default of mortgagor, since finance company's action in invoking processes of court to foreclose mortgage amounted to election of remedy.—Home Service Finance Co. v. not accept property which has once been converted,⁷ nor is he under an obligation to take affirmative steps to repossess the chattels,⁸ but he may waive the conversion.⁹

There is no conversion where the mortgagee rightfully takes or retains possession,¹⁰ or where the property is sold with the consent of the mortgagor¹¹ or in accordance with the terms of the mortgage,¹² or if the mortgagee's interest in the property clearly exceeds its value;¹³ nor is it a conversion that mortgaged property is not sold at the place where it is taken into possession,¹⁴ nor that it is sold on credit.¹⁵ The mortgagee is not liable for conversion by his assignee of property not included in the mortgage or assignment.¹⁶ An

In California

(1) Mere delay without proof of injury to the mortgagor has been held not to amount to a conversion of the property.—Woods Leasing Co. v. Funcheon, 25 P.2d 47, 134 Cal. App. 111.

(2) In an earlier case there is dictum that a delay for an unreasonable time would constitute a conversion.—Peet v. People's Trust & Savings Bank, 204 P. 413, 56 Cal.App. 46.

Short delay

Conversion of automobile did not result from failure at once to proceed to foreclosure after taking possession on default in a single monthly note.—Lipper v. McClain, Tex.Civ. App., 223 S.W. 349.

gor for the difference between the value of the property and the amount of the mortgage debt.²⁰ Where the mortgagee does not take possession and it is not delivered to him,²¹ or where he holds the property until the outcome of a suit to determine his rights therein,²² or where the goods are lawfully taken by the mortgagee from the mortgagor, and no demand is made on the mortgagee for a compliance with the terms of the mortgage or the return of the property,²³ or no tender of the amount due accompanies the demand for a return of the property,²⁴ or where, after the property is taken over, there are negotiations toward effecting a settlement,²⁵ or where foreclosure is enjoined by the mortgagor,²⁶ the mortgagee is not guilty of conversion in detaining the goods. Where sale is delayed with consent of the parties in interest, the mortgagee is not liable for the value of the property at the time of taking possession, although such value is greater than the price obtained at the sale.²⁷

Mortgagee of partial interest. A mortgagee of a partial interest in the property who after sale refuses to pay the proceeds of another's interest to him is liable for conversion.²⁸

b. By Senior Mortgagee

A senior mortgagee with notice of junior mortgages must not act in a manner inconsistent with the rights of the junior mortgagees.

A senior mortgagee owes to subsequent mortgagees good faith in the enforcement of his mortgage provided he has notice of their rights.²⁹ If by fraud or gross negligence he permits the security to be destroyed, lost, or removed he must make good the loss,³⁰ but he is not liable for a removal by the mortgagor where he is not guilty of fraud or gross negligence.³¹ The first mortgagee might become liable for conversion by reason of a void foreclosure sale,³² or because he sells the property without foreclosure and at private sale,³³ or converts the property to his own use when he has the duty to sell it,³⁴ or attaches the mortgaged property,³⁵ or refuses a tender of the amount due on the first mortgage,³⁶ or where he takes possession although under the statutes, his mortgage merely passes an equitable title as against the legal title vesting in the junior mortgagee.³⁷ Where after he has assigned his mortgage and retains no interest therein the senior mortgagee seizes the property, he is guilty of conversion as against the holder of a junior mortgage who has reduced the mortgaged property to his possession.³⁸

A first mortgagee who is rightfully in possession of the mortgaged property is not liable in conver-

Removal with consent of junior mortgagee

If the first mortgagee removes the property from the state with the consent of a junior mortgagee for the purpose of having it sold to satisfy the mortgages, but after its removal uses it for his own purposes instead of selling it, he is liable to the junior mortgagee for the value of the property in excess of the senior mortgage debt.—Peregoy v. sion to a subsequent mortgagee,³⁹ especially where the junior mortgagee consented to the alleged conversion.⁴⁰ A senior mortgagee who receives the mortgaged property from the mortgagor in good faith and at a fair price for the purpose of paying his mortgage is not liable to a junior mortgagee for conversion;⁴¹ nor is he liable where the property is fairly sold and the proceeds applied to his debt⁴² and the surplus proceeds, after deducting the expenses of the sale, turned over to the junior mortgagee.⁴³ Although a prior mortgage is fraudulent, a second mortgagee cannot recover for a depreciation in the value of property which is not consumable by use, while it is in the hands of the first mortgagee under an arrangement with the mortgagor, where the mortgagor or his grantee has a right to the use of the property until a demand by the mortgagee.⁴⁴

The duty of a senior mortgagee in possession to protect the interest of a junior mortgagee by taking care of the property is considered in § 186 supra.

c. By Junior Mortgagee

A junior mortgagee with notice of a senior mortgage who appropriates or sells the property in derogation of the rights of the senior mortgagee is liable for conversion.

A junior mortgagee with notice of a senior mortgage is liable to the senior mortgagee for conversion where he takes possession of the property and appropriates it to his own use,⁴⁵ where he receives the property and puts it beyond the reach of execution under the senior mortgage,⁴⁶ where he sells or assists in the sale of the property for a full consideration and without recognizing the rights of the prior mortgagee,⁴⁷ where he induces a purchaser to buy from the mortgagor,⁴⁸ or where after a legitimate foreclosure sale he resells the property, in which case no demand for the return of the property is necessary.⁴⁹ So, where a junior mortgagee

Advance in price after sale

Where one of mortgagees, asserting conflicting claims to crop of wheat, under stipulation for reimbursement, advanced money for harvesting, such mortgagee was entitled to have wheat sold at best price obtainable and to sell it when it saw fit, provided it acted in good faith, and was not liable, because after sale wheat advanced in price.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Walla Walla v. The act of a senior mortgagee whose mortgage had expired by limitation and had not been renewed, in applying the proceeds of the sale of a part of the mortgaged cattle which had come into his hands as a stakeholder to the payment of wages of the mortgagor's ranch hands was held not a conversion by him of the property, nor to render him accountable to a junior mortgagee for the money so dispensed by him.—Atkins v. Boyle, 80 P. 1067, 33 Colo. 434.

Payment to share croppers

Second mortgagee could not recover from holder of first crop mortgage amount he paid, without knowledge of second mortgagee's claim, to share croppers as their share of proceeds of cotton delivered to him by mortgagors and sold by first mortgagee.—Harris v. Pruett, 32 S.W.2d 300, 132 Ark. 554.

Part of crop

A chattel mortgage on half of a crop of cotton to be raised on certain land, mortgagor to have cotton ginned and baled, was held to contemplate that lien was to cover and apply to one half of bales of cotton, that might be raised, and not an undivided one-half interest in crop, thus giving mortgagee right to elect which bales she should take or sell; and a second mortgagee, who had sequestered and sold the part of the crop before first mortgagee selected her bales, is liable in conversion to the extent of the full value of the part taken.—Citizens' Guaranty State Bank v. fraudulently deals with the mortgaged property so as to defeat the rights of the senior mortgagee, the latter has a right of action against him for damages, although the junior mortgagee may have acted solely for the purpose of securing his own debt.⁵⁰ In some jurisdictions it is held that no actual knowledge is necessary, but that constructive notice arising from the record of the prior mortgage,⁵¹ or from a recital to the junior mortgage that it is expressly subject to a prior mortgage,⁵² is sufficient to render the junior mortgagee liable; but in other jurisdictions it is held that a junior mortgagee is not liable for conversion unless he has actual knowledge of the prior mortgage.⁵³ A prior mortgagee cannot sue a subsequent mortgagee for conversion where the latter takes possession of and sells the property with the consent of the prior mortgagee, notwithstanding a misunderstanding on the part of the prior mortgagee as to the rights of the parties to the proceeds of the sale, if such misunderstanding was not created by fraud on the part of the second mortgagee.⁵⁴ The mere receiving of the proceeds of the sale does not constitute conversion,⁵⁵ and where a junior mortgagee with knowledge of the prior mortgage consents to a sale of the chattels by the mortgagor, receiving the proceeds of sale by virtue of his mortgage, the proceeds of such sale will be held in trust for the first mortgagee.⁵⁶

§ 216. By Third Persons

A third person with actual or constructive notice who wrongfully interferes with a mortgaged chattel may be liable for damages or for a conversion.

A third person wrongfully interfering with a mortgaged chattel may be liable for a conversion,⁵⁷ as where he appropriates it to his own use,⁵⁸ or destroys it,⁵⁹ or wrongfully sells or disposes of it,⁶⁰ or assists in a wrongful use or disposition of the property by the mortgagor,⁶¹ or after default by the mortgagor refuses to deliver it to the mortgagee upon demand.⁶² Likewise, a third person may be held liable for damages where he injures⁶³ or destroys⁶⁴ the mortgaged property, or sells it in defiance of the mortgagee's superior lien.⁶⁵ All persons who join with the principal in the conversion are jointly liable with him,⁶⁶ including factors or agents,⁶⁷ although one who merely loans money to another purchasing the property from the mortgagor without acquiring an interest in the chattel is not liable for conversion.⁶⁸

A third person whose acts with relation to the mortgaged chattel are proper or authorized, and who does not prejudice the mortgagor's or mortgagee's rights, is not liable for damages or for conversion.⁶⁹ So a purchaser in good faith from a first mortgagee with power to sell is not guilty of

Purchase of property from the mortgagor as conversion is considered in § 264 infra.

Landlord in possession of abandoned chattels

Where tenant abandoned premises and turned key over to landlord, without removing property which was subject to chattel mortgages landlord became "involuntary bailee" of assets left on premises by tenant, and he was entitled to time to investigate such property, to examine chattel mortgages, to make inventory, to protect itself from liability on account of having become involuntary bailee, to keep one chattel mortgagee from taking property of another chattel mortgagee, and to protect itself in so far as its own blanket mortgage lien for past-due rent was concerned. In doing so he was not liable for conversion and the fact that in a letter to chattel mortgagee who had been denied key to premises he stated that he was holding tenant's property under lien for rent was held insufficient to show conversion of mortgagee's property where letter recognized superiority of lien of chattel mortgage.—St. Louis Fixture & Show Case Co. v. held liable for damages where he injures⁶³ or destroys⁶⁴ the mortgaged property, or sells it in defiance of the mortgagee's superior lien.⁶⁵ All persons who join with the principal in the conversion are jointly liable with him,⁶⁶ including factors or agents,⁶⁷ although one who merely loans money to another purchasing the property from the mortgagor without acquiring an interest in the chattel is not liable for conversion.⁶⁸

A third person whose acts with relation to the mortgaged chattel are proper or authorized, and who does not prejudice the mortgagor's or mortgagee's rights, is not liable for damages or for conversion.⁶⁹ So a purchaser in good faith from a first mortgagee with power to sell is not guilty of conversion as to a second mortgagee.⁷⁰ If the mortgagee consented to the alleged acts of conversion he cannot complain.⁷¹ After a conversion has taken place the mortgagee may waive the tort.⁷²

Purchase of property from the mortgagor as conversion is considered in § 264 infra.

Notice. To be guilty of conversion, actual notice of the mortgage is not necessary if it is recorded.⁷³ A third person without notice who takes possession before the mortgage is recorded is not liable for conversion to the mortgagee.⁷⁴

Satisfaction of prior lien

Where the proceeds of that part of the mortgaged property which defendant directed the mortgagee to sell were applied to satisfy his superior lien as landlord, he was not liable for conversion.—Dixie Fertilizer Co. v. Teasley, 69 So. 988, 14 Ala.App. 283.

Landlord in possession of abandoned chattels

Where tenant abandoned premises and turned key over to landlord, without removing property which was subject to chattel mortgages landlord became "involuntary bailee" of assets left on premises by tenant, and he was entitled to time to investigate such property, to examine chattel mortgages, to make inventory, to protect itself from liability on account of having become involuntary bailee, to keep one chattel mortgagee from taking property of another chattel mortgagee, and to protect itself in so far as its own blanket mortgage lien for past-due rent was concerned. In doing so he was not liable for conversion and the fact that in a letter to chattel mortgagee who had been denied key to premises he stated that he was holding tenant's property under lien for rent was held insufficient to show conversion of mortgagee's property where letter recognized superiority of lien of chattel mortgage.—St. Louis Fixture & Show Case Co. v. Garage keeper, who had actual notice from mortgagor that automobile was purchased through mortgagee and that he still owed money on account of purchase price was held put on inquiry as to respective rights of mortgagor and mortgagee before selling car to satisfy lien for repairs and storage, under Lien L. §§ 184, 201, 202.—National Surety Co. v. a writ of attachment or execution in derogation of the mortgagee's rights constitutes a conversion.

The seizure and sale in derogation of the mortgagee's rights of mortgaged personal property in the hands of the mortgagor, on a writ of attachment or execution against him, amounts to a conversion,⁷⁵ but where the attachment does not affect the mortgagee's interest and is not in derogation of his rights there is no conversion.⁷⁶ So, where the mortgagee is rightfully in possession, a creditor of the mortgagor who levies on the mortgaged chattels is guilty of a conversion,⁷⁷ and a levying officer is guilty of a conversion if he levies on and sells the property without payment or tender of the mortgage debt to the mortgagee as required by statute.⁷⁸ It is a conversion where the officer with notice of the mortgage assumes to sell the entire interest,⁷⁹ even though the purchaser at the sale knows of the mortgage.⁸⁰ The retention of the mortgaged chattels by an execution creditor who purchased at the execution sale with notice of the mortgagee's rights constitutes a conversion.⁸¹ Where the execution is valid when delivered, the judgment creditor is not liable for a wrongful sale by the officer,⁸² and, likewise, he is not responsible for mortgaged property which is stolen after being put in storage by the officer on his own volition.⁸³

H. ACTIONS BY MORTGAGOR

§ 218. Against Mortgagee

As will be shown infra §§ 219-226, on compliance with all conditions precedent, and subject to the general rules relating to parties, pleading, evidence, trial and judgment, the mortgagor in an action against a chattel mortgagee interfering with his right of possession or redemption can recover the property or damages for its conversion or detention.

§ 219. — Right of Action

For interference with his right of possession or redemption, the mortgagor can recover, in a proper case, the chattel or damages.

A mortgagor rightfully in possession has a right of action for damages against the mortgagee for wrongfully disturbing his possession⁸⁴ or he may

Refusal to deliver on demand

The lessor of land for one-half the crop and advances, who attached and took possession of the whole crop, and personally and through the sheriff refused, on demand, to deliver possession to the lessees' mortgagee, was guilty of conversion.—Moosios v. Rusconi, 174 P. 92, 37 Cal.App. 471.

Refusal to disclose purchaser

Judgment creditor of mortgagor, selling chattels at judicial sale and refusing to disclose names of purchasers, is liable in damages to mortgagee.—Covington v. Matlock, 121 So. 355, 10 La.App. 445.

Void execution sale

The purchaser of chattels under void execution sale and officer conducting sale, being wrongdoers, are not in a position to demand that the assignee of a mortgagee of property taken look to other property of mortgagor or to the mortgagor's personal responsibility.—Hopping v. Hicks, Tex.Civ.App., 190 S.W. 1119, error refused.

Absence of notice

Where mortgage was not in default and affidavit of mortgagee's interest in judgment debtor's automobile levied on by marshal while in judgment debtor's possession was not given marshal as required by statute until after sale, when mortgagee decided to take possession under insecurity clause, sale was held valid as against claim of conversion by mortgagee against marshal and judgment creditor.—Huss v. 11 C.J. p 593 note 84.

Waiver

The failure of chattel mortgagees to call agreements extending time of payment of notes secured by mortgage to attention of sheriff levying upon property subject to mortgage did not waive any of mortgagees' rights, where extension agreement was fully executed between mortgagor and mortgagee prior to acquisition of any rights of execution creditor, so that execution creditor and sureties on his bond executed to protect sheriff in making levy were liable for value of sheep and for fees of mortgagees' attorneys.—Bank of California v. McCoy, 72 P.2d 923, 23 Cal.App.2d 192.

Payment to assignee of mortgagee recover possession of the property as by replevin,⁸⁵ or, as shown infra § 256, he may have an injunction to prevent the mortgagee from improperly interfering with the property in violation of the mortgagor's rights. After termination of the mortgagor's right to possession, however, he cannot ordinarily maintain trespass,⁸⁶ trover,⁸⁷ detinue,⁸⁸ or replevin⁸⁹ against the mortgagee, but is left to an action on the case⁹⁰ or to a bill in equity.⁹¹ The right of action is controlled by the conditions existing at the date of the alleged conversion.⁹²

Where possession is taken under a mortgage procured by fraud, the mortgagor may maintain replevin;⁹³ and where plaintiff contends that the property in suit was described in the mortgage without his authority, it is not necessary to sue in equity to reform the instrument or set it aside as void.⁹⁴

en into possession by the mortgagee under a mortgage based on an illegal consideration. The rule supported by the better reasoning apparently is that recovery will not be permitted,⁹⁵ although there is authority to the contrary.⁹⁶

It has been held that the mortgagor may waive the tort and in case of conversion sue the mortgagee in contract.⁹⁷

A statute relating to ascertainment of the amount of the mortgage debt, in an action by the mortgagee, does not apply to a suit by a mortgagor against the mortgagee to recover the property under a claim that the mortgage debt is paid.⁹⁸

§ 220. — Conditions Precedent

Tender of payment of the mortgage debt and demand may be, and ordinarily are, conditions precedent to mortgagor's action.

A tender or payment of the mortgage debt, is, as a general rule, essential to the right of the mortgagor to maintain, as against a mortgagee in possession

Concurrent remedies

A statute authorizing an injunction for the purpose of transferring foreclosure proceedings to a court does not preclude an action at law to recover property wrongfully seized and sold under a chattel mortgage.—Black v. Howell, 10 N.W. 216, 56 Iowa 630.

Tender of payment

If the mortgagor tenders payment of the amount secured within the time provided therefor and the tender is refused, the mortgagor may maintain trover against the mortgagee.—Pierce v. Hasbrouck, 49 Ill. 23.

Second mortgagee entitled to possession

Although first chattel mortgage was voidable, mortgagor could not recover against first mortgagee for conversion of the property where at time of the conversion the first mortgage had not been declared void, and the property was turned over to the first mortgagee by a second mortgagee in possession thereof under a valid mortgage after condition broken and while a balance was due on the second mortgage, under belief that first mortgagee had prior lien, for, since such surrender was not waiver of the second mortgagee's lien, the second mortgagee was the only one entitled to possession at that time.—Cook v. under the mortgage, trover,⁹⁹ detinue,¹ or replevin,² or to recover possession of the chattels in an equitable action after default;³ and in an action of replevin the tender must be made before the writ is issued, otherwise it will be disregarded.⁴ Not only must a tender be made, but it must be kept good to the date of the trial.⁵ However, where the mortgagee has placed it out of his power to return the mortgaged property, a tender of the mortgage debt is unnecessary as precedent to trover by the mortgagor,⁶ and a like rule applies where the suit is brought before the debt is due⁷ or where the mortgagee is in possession under a claim of absolute ownership and has sold more than enough of the goods to pay the mortgage debt.⁸ A mere claim of absolute ownership by the mortgagee is held sufficient by some authorities to excuse a tender before an action to recover possession of the property,⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.¹⁰

A valid tender as a condition to replevin may be coupled with a condition that the mortgagee execute and deliver such a satisfaction piece as the mortgagor has a right to demand.¹¹ Since on payment of the debt the mortgagor is ordinarily entitled to restoration of the possession of the mortgaged property, a tender of the amount due may likewise ordinarily be coupled with a demand for the restoration of the possession.¹²

Demand. Ordinarily a demand for the return of the mortgaged chattels is a condition precedent to a suit for damages against a mortgagee who acquired possession rightfully. A demand is not, however, always necessary.¹³ Thus if the mortgagee justifies his seizure of the chattels under the provisions of the mortgage, a demand is not necessary before suing for damages for the seizure;¹⁴ and in any event a demand may be excused if it appears that it would be useless,¹⁵ as where defendant, by clear and unequivocal act and word, claims the property as his own and denies that plaintiff has any interest in it.¹⁶

§ 221. — Defenses

The mortgagee may interpose defenses which go to defeat the mortgagor's recovery.

It is a defense to an action by the mortgagor against the mortgagee for conversion that the mortgagor has consented to, or ratified, the acts of the mortgagee,¹⁷ or expressly waived the right of action,¹⁸ but merely retaining money, notes and papers given for the chattels and returned by the mortgagee at the time of the latter's conversion does not constitute a waiver.¹⁹ An offer by the mortgagee to return the property is not a defense where it has depreciated in value while in his possession.²⁰ The existence of subsequent liens on converted mortgaged property is a good defense pro tanto to the claim of the mortgagor.²¹ In an action by the mortgagor for conversion the mortgagee may set off his debt,²² and interest to date of conversion;²³ and in some jurisdictions by authority of statute the mortgagee may show, in mitigation of damages, the amount of any lien to which plaintiff's rights were subject and which was held or paid by defendant or any person under whom he claims.²⁴ It has been held that the mortgage debt cannot be set up in defense to an action for the possession of the mortgaged property,²⁵ although a contrary rule is established by statute in some jurisdictions.²⁶ Where the mortgagor seeks to maintain replevin for the mortgaged goods on the ground that the mortgage was procured through fraud, fraud perpetrated by the mortgagor in another transaction will not constitute a defense;²⁷ and a chattel mortgagee, having unlawfully seized the mortgaged chattels before the statutory right so to do has accrued, cannot set off his lien against the value of their use to the time such right would have accrued.²⁸

The mortgagee may implead subsequent mortgagees; and after the mortgagor's death his administrator is a proper party.

The mortgagee, it has been held, may implead subsequent mortgagees.²⁹ The mortgagor's right of action passes to his personal representative on his death.³⁰

§ 223. — Pleading

The pleadings must sufficiently state the cause of action or defense; and general rules as to issues, proof, and variance prevail.

The mortgagor must allege all issuable facts necessary to warrant a recovery.³¹ A declaration in trover or a conversion of the property may be amended by adding a count claiming damages for the negligent acts described in the original declaration,³² or a complaint in replevin may be amended to show that the mortgage was fraudulent.³³ Where plaintiff, suing for possession of the goods taken under a mortgage fraudulently executed pursuant to a conspiracy between defendant mortgagee and plaintiff's joint adventurer, alleges a prior mortgage but does not claim thereunder, as mortgagee, he need not allege that defendant had notice of such prior mortgage when he took his own mortgage.³⁴

Defendant's pleadings must sufficiently state his defenses.³⁵ If he wishes to rely on matters in mitigation of damages, it has been held that they must be specially pleaded, because the defense in mitigation is in effect a plea in confession and avoidance.³⁶

Issues, proof, and variance. A mortgagor who seeks to recover chattels seized by a mortgagee on the ground that the mortgage was invalid need not tender in his complaint an issue with regard to the precise kind of invalidity he intends to set up.³⁷

and should not mislead the jury.⁶⁹ It is not error, in a proper case, to instruct the jury that the facts show that the taking and conversion were wrongful, and that the only thing left for them to determine was the extent of plaintiff's damages, if any, and the amount, if anything, he should recover.⁷⁰

Verdict or findings in an action by the mortgagor against the mortgagee for conversion will not be disturbed unless manifestly unsupported by the evidence⁷¹ or not warranted by the instructions.⁷² A jury called on to answer specific questions cannot control the judgment by a general verdict which in effect contradicts the specific findings.⁷³ While replevin is merely a possessory action, where the rights of the parties change subsequently to the commencement of such an action, but prior to the date of the trial, the judgment should adjust the equities as they exist at the date of trial.⁷⁴ Where, pending disposal of a motion for new trial filed by the mortgagee in his replevin suit based on a chattel mortgage, the mortgagor began a second suit in replevin, the value of the property as assessed in the judgment in the second suit which went against mortgagor on appeal should not exceed the amount as assessed in the first suit.⁷⁵

Satisfaction of judgment. Where, prior to the recovery of a judgment by the mortgagor against one who had converted the mortgaged chattels, there had been a default in the condition of the mortgage, and the mortgagee had thus become the absolute owner, subject only to the right of redemption, and entitled to the immediate possession thereof, satisfaction of the judgment for the full value by the judgment debtor transfers to him the title of both mortgagor and mortgagee.⁷⁶

§ 226. — Damages and Accounting

The mortgagor is entitled to recover from the mortgagee the damages proximately resulting from the latter's wrongful act as measured in accordance with the usual rules, and, in a proper case, also exemplary damages.

The damages recoverable by the mortgagor against the mortgagee must be the natural and proximate cause of the alleged wrongful act.⁷⁷ He cannot recover exemplary or punitive damages in an action for conversion, unless he shows willful malice, or fraud, or gross negligence on the part of the mortgagee,⁷⁸ but such damages may be allowed where the mortgagee acts maliciously and oppressively,⁷⁹ and after condition broken the mortgagor may recover exemplary damages from the mortgagee for an alleged unlawful and wanton trespass committed by defendant in entering the mortgaged premises, and in taking away the goods.⁸⁰ A verdict will not be set aside as based on passion and prejudice merely because the jury, through a natural mistake, granted excessive damages to plaintiff where the judgment can be reduced to the extent thereof.⁸¹

Measure of damages. Where a mortgagee of chattels takes possession and converts before condition broken, the mortgagor's measure of damages is the value of the property at the time of the conversion⁸² not exceeding the value alleged in the com-positive testimony that plaintiff had not executed it.—Mims v. Bennett, 158 S.E. 124, 160 S.C. 39, 78 A.L.R. 360.

(2) In action involving rights of successors to chattel mortgagor and mortgagee, instruction that action was for accounting of proceeds of sale of mortgaged property by defendant, and if no surplus remained, verdict must be for defendant, was properly refused.—*International Harvester Co. of America v. Application of part of goods to mortgage debt

Where there was no agreement by which defendant was to take part of plaintiff's goods in full settlement of a mortgage, measure of damages would be difference between value of all goods taken and the amount due defendant, but if there was such a settlement, and defendant took all the goods, the measure of damages would be value of goods which he had no right to take. — Allen v. Forschler, Mo.App., 189 S.W. 636.

Loss of use and expenses

Recovery of one hundred dollars for the loss of use of cattle converted, the loss of time and expenses incurred in attending court, and "other things." — Cleveland State Bank v. Lilley, Tex.Civ.App., 260 S.W. 324.

Market value

(1) Where chattels are unlawfully sold, the owner's measure of damages is market value of property, and not the price at which it was sold. — Barron-Fisher-Caudill Land Co. v. Rhoda, 191 S.W. 229, 126 Ark. 554.

(2) Price fixed on in an ineffectual sale is not necessarily the fair and reasonable basis to determine true value of property. — Montgomery County Nat. Bank v. Wherry, 169 P. 1146, 102 Kan. 224.

(3) In fixing damages for conversion of automobiles, the standard of value is the market value at the place of conversion, and not the wholesale price plus freight.—McLeod Nash Motors v. Commercial Credit Trust, 246 N.W. 17, 187 Minn. 452, 87 A.L.R. 296.

(4) An instruction that the market value is not the sole criterion of liability for conversion of mortgaged cows was erroneous.—Green v. Van Cott, 246 N.Y.S. 481, 230 App.Div. 633.

Sale price

Where mortgagee who converted automobile sold it for one hundred fifty dollars and a used automobile, sale price cannot be taken into consideration in determining damages in mortgagor's action for conversion, where sale price was under amount of mortgage and there was no fraud.—Colonial Finance Co. v. Bear, 189 N.E. 673, 46 Ohio App. 498.

Sickness

Owners of household goods converted by mortgagee are entitled to recover damages resulting from wrongful taking of property, including damages for sickness directly resulting.—Quick v. Knight, 67 S.W.2d 729, 188 Ark. 777.

Taking of household furniture

Two hundred dollars each to husband and wife for humiliation, embarrassment, and inconvenience, including cost of room and board for themselves and child for two months, because of illegal removal and storage of their furniture by seller-mortgagee, without reasonable excuse was authorized.—Elders v. Montgomery-Ward & Co., La.App., 172 So. 191.

Expenses of redeeming

Where mortgagee was sued for damages for trespass in seizing automobile, recovery of expenses in redeeming car and unnecessary repair bill which the mortgagor was required to pay in redeeming, was held authorized.—Texas Auto Co. v. Clark, Tex.Civ.App., 12 S.W.2d 655.

11 C.J. p 598 note 62.

"The holder of a chattel mortgage having refused a tender of the plain-of conversion⁸⁹ must be deducted from this sum, and that when the amount of the lien exceeds the value of the property converted, plaintiff cannot recover.⁹⁰ So, where the mortgagee is an accommodation indorser of the mortgagor's note he is entitled to a credit for an amount subsequently paid by him in discharging the note.⁹¹ Where the mortgage is on goods sold by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, it is immaterial what the original price was or the amount of the payments plaintiff has made thereon.⁹² The mortgagor's measure of damages in an action for the conversion of goods delivered to defendant mortgagee under an agreement to sell them for plaintiff for a certain amount is the difference between such amount and the amount of plaintiff's debt to defendant.⁹³

The measure of damages for detention is the value of the use of the property up to the time when defendant became lawfully entitled to possession.⁹⁴ In some jurisdictions the jury may in their discretion allow interest as damages,⁹⁵ but the fact that the value of its use cannot be ascertained does not justify the allowance of interest on the total value of the property.⁹⁶

Accounting for rents. Where a chattel mortgagee improperly takes possession of the property on replevin, the mortgagor may compel him to account for rents received.⁹⁷

§ 227. Against Third Persons

A mortgagor in lawful possession of the mortgaged chattels may protect that possession against third parties by appropriate legal remedies, as to which general rules relating to defenses, parties, pleading, evidence, trial, and damages apply.

The mortgagor in lawful possession, whether by the terms of the mortgage or otherwise, has the right to protect his possession against third parties by appropriate legal remedies, because he is regarded as the owner of the property mortgaged as against all persons except the mortgagee.⁹⁸ Hence, tiff to pay its note and mortgage in full, and having sold the mortgaged property, thereby became liable to her for at least the difference between the value of the mortgaged property and its debt.—Stewart v. Farmers' State Bank, 202 P. 623, 110 Kan. 82.

Reason for rule

The amount of the mortgage debt is deducted in order to avoid circuity of action, two suits to adjust equities in a single transaction not being tolerated when adjustment can be made in one suit.—Brink v. Freoff, 6 N.W. 94, 44 Mich. 69, 40 Mich. 610.

In absence of claim for balance

In action for conversion of chattels released from mortgage, judgment for value thereof was proper, where converter made no claim by way of set-off for alleged balance of debt.—Styke v. Sioux Falls Motor Co., 244 N.W. 387, 60 S.D. 358.

94. Idaho.—Gunnell v. Largilliere Co., Bankers, 269 P. 412, 415, 46 Idaho 551, citing Corpus Juris.

Limits of recovery

Compensation to the mortgagor is not the limit of recovery, but the wrongdoer is not to be allowed to profit by his own wrong, and the mortgagor may recover, in addition to the property or its value, the value of the use of the property during the time of detention in case it exceeds interest; and it is immaterial that the injured mortgagor replaces the property by purchase, or that he in fact loses money in the use of the property so purchased, the value of the use being limited to the use for the purpose for which the property was used by the mortgagor and the mortgagee, at least in the absence of pleading by the mortgagor that he could and would have rented out the property for some other use.—Montgomery v. Gallas, Tex.Civ.App., 225 S.W. 557.

11 C.J. p 598 note 65.

Value exceeding debt

The rule that the mortgagor wrongfully deprived of his property by the mortgagee cannot recover possession of the mortgaged property from the mortgagee after conditions arise which would authorize the mortgagee to take possession, without paying the mortgage debt does not apply where the value of the use to which the mortgagee has put the mortgaged property exceeds the mortgage debt, and in such case the mortgagor may recover the mortgaged property and the excess of the value of such use over the amount of the mortgage debt.—Montgomery v. Gallas, supra.

"Value of use" as "rental value"

The term "value of the use" of property subject to chattel mortgage, and withheld by the mortgagee from plaintiff mortgagor, when unaccompanied by allegations showing a special use for a particular purpose, means no more than "rental value"; and the measure of plaintiff's damages is the rental value of the mortgaged property for the time for which it was unlawfully withheld from plaintiff by defendant mortgagee.—Montgomery v. Gallas, supra.

the mortgagor may maintain an action where an officer makes a wrongful levy⁹⁹ or seizes exempt property on an execution,¹ or to recover for damage to the property caused by the negligence of a third person;² and it has been held that a mortgagor can recover in a suit brought in his own name on an account owing him which had been included in a mortgage.³ Even if the mortgagor is in default, yet if he still has possession, he has an interest sufficient to maintain an action against a third party wrongfully converting or destroying the property,⁴ especially where he has obtained the consent of the mortgagee, or even without his consent, after demand and his refusal, to bring it.⁵ After the mortgagor has parted with the possession of the property he can maintain an action on the case, or, in code states, an action in the nature of an action on the case, against one who takes the property from the hands of the mortgagee,⁶ but a mortgagor who was neither in possession of the mortgaged chattels nor entitled to their possession at the time of the conversion cannot maintain trover therefor.⁷ So, recovery for the full amount of the damages by the mortgagee under the principles discussed infra § 229 will bar recovery by the mortgagor.⁸ Although a mortgagor in possession may maintain trespass for an injury to his right of possession and recover, by way of aggravation, for injury to the property itself, the right to such damages is only incidental to the right of action for an injury to the possession and is subordinate to the mortgagee's right to recover for damages to the property itself.⁹ A mortgagor who has given the mortgagee the right, on default in payment of any installment of the mortgage note, to sell the chattels, has no property right in them after default sufficient to sustain an interplea as against the mortgagee's attaching creditor.¹⁰

It constitutes a sufficient defense that plaintiff's cause of action has been extinguished subsequent to the commencement of his suit,¹¹ and to an action for conversion by the mortgagor against a purchaser of the goods, the mortgagee's parol license to sell personalty mortgaged by instrument under seal is a good defense.¹² Where the answer in an action for conversion asserted that defendant was the owner of the goods, he was entitled to show that subsequent to the wrongful taking of the property he purchased outright the mortgage on the goods, and was entitled to have the amount due on the mortgage credited to him and deducted from the value of the property wrongfully taken.¹³ An answer which does not present a defense is demurrable, however,¹⁴ as where in an action against the mortgagee and its adjuster for conversion the latter pleaded that plaintiff was delinquent in his payments and that the pleader took the chattels with plaintiff's consent, but did not allege that he turned them over to the mortgagee and took no part in the conversion or its proceeds.¹⁵

Parties. It is not ordinarily necessary in an action by the mortgagor to join the mortgagee,¹⁶ but defendant may demand that the mortgagee be made a party where the mortgagee has been deprived of his security.¹⁷ Thus, in an action by the mortgagor against a tort-feasor for destruction of the mortgaged property, defendant may cause the mortgagee and other interested parties to be brought into court to protect him from a second action,¹⁸ and the mortgagee has a right to intervene in the action.¹⁹ Joinder of mortgagor and mortgagee as parties plaintiff in an action against a third party generally is treated infra § 240 a.

Evidence. In an action by the mortgagor for conversion, general rules of evidence apply.²⁰ Thus, in a possessory action by a chattel mortgagor against a purchaser from the chattel mortgagee who set up no claim to the property except under foreclosure, it was held that the burden of proving the mortgagor's consent that the mortgage should stand as security for debts or claims not mentioned therein was on the purchaser.²¹

Trial. In accordance with the general rules applicable in the trial of civil actions generally, disputed questions of fact should be submitted to the jury for determination,²² and the court should properly instruct the jury as to the law of the case.²³ The suit should be dismissed as to parties not shown to have any connection with the tort.²⁴

Measure of damages. More than a nominal recovery may be obtained by the mortgagor,²⁵ for the measure of damages is the full face value of the goods which are taken from his possession²⁶ or destroyed.²⁷ The damages are the same whether the mortgagor or a stranger becomes the purchaser of the property at the sale under the wrongful levy.²⁸

20. Admissibility

In action by mortgagor and purchaser of mortgaged cattle for conversion thereof by lessee of grazing land, testimony as to application of proceeds of sales thereof by defendants and mortgagee on note and mortgage, and recourse to property of mortgagor's comaker for deficiency, is immaterial and incompetent, although evidence that notes secured by mortgage were paid before action was brought was admissible to prove plaintiffs' right to sue instead of mortgagee. Furthermore, admission of testimony as to plaintiff's preparations for wintering and care of cattle is prejudicial error, in absence of claim for loss caused thereby; but the mortgagor's testimony as to intent in buying cattle and making arrangements with subsequent purchaser to care for them after resale is admissible as indicating good faith in transaction with such purchaser, which was challenged by defense. Testimony as to whether assignee of mortgage would have foreclosed, if defendants had not taken possession of cattle is inadmissible, however, in absence of allegations of special damages. Testimony as to whether mortgagees selling cattle on foreclosure had received returns from sales of cattle not accounted for by figures of account sales and sheriff's return is material.—Frost v. J. I. ACTIONS BY MORTGAGEE

§ 228. In General

As shown infra §§ 229-245, on compliance with all conditions precedent and subject to general rules relating to parties, pleading, evidence, trial, and judgment, unless defendant can interpose some valid defense or counterclaim, a chattel mortgagee in an action against the mortgagor or some third person interfering with plaintiff's right of possession can recover the mortgaged property or damages for its conversion or detention.

§ 229. Right of Action

An action may be maintained by the mortgagee under proper circumstances to protect his interest in the mortgaged chattels.

A mortgagee of personal property may maintain a possessory action against one who wrongfully takes the property from his possession,²⁹ and a mortgagee entitled to possession may maintain an action for its conversion,³⁰ or trespass for damages to his possession,³¹ or an action on the case,³² even before condition broken,³³ and notwithstanding the tort-feasor may also be subject to criminal prosecution for his acts respecting the mortgaged property.³⁴ A mortgagee may also enforce an immediate right to possession of the property conveyed by the mortgage in an action of replevin,³⁵ or

Any one who is instrumental in the disposition of the property in denial of the mortgagee's right, or who causes or induces such disposition of the property is liable to the mortgagee.—Oats v. Dublin Nat. Bank, 90 S.W.2d 824, 827, 127 Tex. 2, reversing Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Dublin Nat. Bank, Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 567.

Insecurity clause

Mortgagee is entitled to judgment in trover, although notes were not payable until after property had been converted, where mortgage gave him right to seize property whenever he deemed himself insecure.—Arnold v. Sutherlin, 114 So. 140, 216 Ala. 546.

Effect of statutes

(1) The common-law right of action for conversion of mortgaged property cannot be abridged except by an express statutory enactment.—Forbush v. San Diego Fruit & Produce Co., 266 P. 659, 46 Idaho 231.

(2) Hence a statutory provision for but one action to recover debt or enforce right secured by mortgage is inapplicable to action for conversion of mortgaged property, such action not being on debt but to protect the value of the security given. Cal.—Mills v. Brown, 269 P. 636, 205 Cal. 38.

Amount of debt

The right to possession depends on the existence of a debt and not its amount.—Moore v. Sanders, 103 S.E. 589, 114 S.C. 350.

To enforce mortgage

(1) Mortgagee may maintain replevin, not for purpose of obtaining and keeping possession of personalty, but only to obtain possession for purpose of selling under power in mortgage.—Moore v. Price, 70 S.W.2d 563, 189 Ark. 117.

(2) Mortgagee's action of replevin is concerned solely with the right of possession, and not with the proper method of subsequently disposing of the mortgaged property and accounting for the proceeds.—Clemmitt v. Miehle Printing Press & Mfg. Co., 110 A. 713, 136 Md. 385.

(3) Claim and delivery for possession by the mortgagee is a proceeding not primarily to secure a judgment for the amount of the note secured, but to enforce provisions of the mortgage, which in such proceeding is paramount.—Elders v. Feutrel, 96 S.E. 541, 110 S.C. 307.

(4) The remedy by foreclosure given the holder of a bill of sale as security by Civ.Code 1910 § 3298 does not preclude an action by the creditor to recover the property.—Hill v. Marshall, 90 S.E. 175, 18 Ga. App. 652.

Estoppel and waiver

An action by mortgagee seeking possession of property to which claim was made by a third party by virtue of attachment proceedings which were ineffectual as to mortgagee because of sheriff's failure upon levy to take property into custody was not barred because mortgagee acted as attorney for such third-party claimant in the attachment proceedings.—Ruskin v. Cheney, Cal. Super., 70 P.8d 278.

In Louisiana the holder of a chattel mortgage has a right, in an appropriate proceeding, to pursue the property in the hands of third persons by hypothecary action or otherwise.—Black v. O. K. Radiator & Sheet Metal Works, App., 152 So. 782.

In Washington

(1) It seems that replevin is not a remedy available to a chattel mortgagee after default by the mortgagor.—Roberts v. Speck, 16 P.2d 463, 170 Wash. 324—Raymond Bros. Impact Pulverizer Co. v. Thomas, 294 P. 219, 159 Wash. 550—Spokane Sec. Finance Co. v. Crowley Lumber Co., 279 P. 103, 152 Wash. 697, affirming 274 P. 102, 150 Wash. 559—Roche Fruit & Produce Co. v. Lane, 255 P. 955, 143 Wash. 700—Roche Fruit & Produce Co. v. Vaught, 255 P. 953, 143 Wash. 601.

(2) "The case of Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. Gowan, 63 P. 1111, 24 Wash. 66 . . . held that, where a chattel mortgage gave the mortgagee the right in the case of default in payment to take possession of the goods, such possession could be enforced by an action of claim and delivery. . . . The cases of Nettleton v. Evans, 121 P. 54, 67 Wash. 227, and Roche Fruit & Produce Co. v. Vaught, 255 P. 953, 143 Wash. 601 . . . held that a mortgage of chattels, where the mortgage gave the right of possession, in the case of default did not have the right to maintain an action of replevin, but must proceed to foreclose his security under the terms of the mortgage. . . . In neither of those cases is the Bancroft-Whitney Case cited, but was of necessity implicitly overruled. In order that the matter may now be set at rest, we say that the Bancroft-Whitney Case is overruled, and the doctrine of the cases of Nettleton v. Evans and Roche Fruit & Produce Co. v. Vaught is adhered to."—Spokane Sec. Finance Co. v. Crowley Lumber Co., supra.

(3) The rule that the mortgagee is not entitled to possession of the mortgaged property and cannot therefore recover it in a replevin action applies only to a mortgagee whose rights are secured by a conventional chattel mortgage, and not to a mortgage which contemplates the actual transfer of possession from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and transfer of possession has actually been made to be held as security.—Burke v. Wilson, 181 P. 904, 107 Wash. 454.

If stipulated right to possession under chattel mortgage depends on extraneous facts, existence or non-existence thereof is triable at law in detinue without resorting to equity.—Manufacturers' Finance Acceptance Corporation v. replevin⁴² or detinue;⁴³ but where the property covered by the mortgage is delivered to the mortgagee to apply to the mortgage debt he has such title and right to possession as will support trover.⁴⁴ Although the mortgagee is not in possession or entitled to immediate possession he may bring an action in damages for an injury to his interest in the mortgaged property,⁴⁵ and although he is held to acquire no title to the mortgaged property until after foreclosure and sale, he nevertheless has such an interest as may be protected by an action at law.⁴⁶ Where the mortgagee is regarded as being the legal owner on condition broken, he may maintain an action for damages for injury to the mortgaged property after breach of the condition of the mortgage.⁴⁷

Title. The mortgagee, in order to maintain replevin, must rely on the strength of his own title,⁴⁸ without aid from the weakness or absence of title in defendant;⁴⁹ and he cannot succeed where he relies on an invalid mortgage.⁵⁰

A mere equitable title or interest is not sufficient to enable one to maintain trover or replevin, at least where the legal title and actual possession are in another.⁵¹ So it has been held that, in order to sustain an action of trover, plaintiff must have title, as distinguished from a mere lien.⁵² Where, in accordance with the rule stated supra § 225, title to the property has passed to a judgment debtor by virtue of satisfaction of the judgment in an action of conversion by the mortgagor, the mortgagee cannot recover possession of the property but must look to the money paid to the mortgagor on the judgment for conversion,⁵³ even though default by the mortgagor occurs prior to the recovery of the judgment.⁵⁴ A mortgagee need not show a legal title to the property, however, in order to maintain an action on the case against a purchaser who bought the property with notice of the equitable lien thereon.⁵⁵ One who held two mortgages but could not recover under the second in time of execution because he did not own it at the time of the institution of the suit, may rely upon the first unless the second was intended to, and did, supersede the first.⁵⁶

After-acquired property. Where the rule, stated supra § 26, that possession must be taken in order to validate the mortgage of property subsequently to be acquired controls, it is held that a mortgagee of such property cannot, without previously having had the property in his possession, maintain replevin⁵⁷ or trover.⁵⁸ Although a mortgage on an un-

Undivided share of crop

Where mortgage covered, in addition to mules, wagon, etc., cotton to be grown by mortgagor on third person's land under agreement entitling mortgagor to a share of the crop, the mortgagee, on mortgagor's default and transfer to mortgagee of the mortgaged goods other than the cotton, could not recover possession of specified amount of cotton in action against mortgagor and third person before the crop had been divided, his remedy being in equity.—Wilson v. 58. N.Y.—Fleetham v. Reddick, 31 N.Y.S. 342, 82 Hun 390.

§ 232. — Action by Second Mortgagee

The second mortgagee can ordinarily maintain trover, replevin, or detinue against all persons except the prior mortgagee and those claiming under him.

As against all persons other than the prior mortgagee and those claiming in his right, a subsequent mortgagee is entitled to maintain trover,⁹⁰ replevin,⁹¹ or detinue.⁹² So a second mortgagee, in joint possession with the first mortgagee, may maintain an action against a third person for conversion;⁹³ and, as shown infra § 249, it is also held that a second mortgagee entitled to possession may maintain an action for conversion against the first mortgagee for the wrongful conversion of the property covered by the two mortgages.

To maintain trover, a second mortgagee must have either possession or a right to immediate possession.⁹⁴ The mortgagee under a second mortgage given after the mortgagor has been divested of legal title and right of possession, cannot maintain an action for possession but is limited to a suit in equity to redeem or for an accounting.⁹⁵

Where the mortgaged property is insufficient to satisfy the first mortgage, a second mortgagee sustains no damage entitling him to recover because of the conversion of the mortgaged property by a purchaser from the mortgagor.⁹⁶

§ 233. Conditions Precedent; Demand

a. Conditions precedent in general

b. Demand

a. Conditions Precedent in General

Plaintiff must comply with statutory or other conditions precedent.

Before the commencement, by the mortgagee, of an action to replevin mortgaged chattels, there must be a compliance with statutory conditions precedent,⁹⁷ such as a statute requiring the mortgagee to furnish the mortgagor a verified itemized statement of his account,⁹⁸ which, however, is satisfied by an account made in good faith and affording reasonable information.⁹⁹ In a suit to foreclose a chattel mortgage and collect a note, where plaintiffs alleged that third persons had converted the mortgaged chattels and the cause as to conversion was transferred to another court, a valid judgment against the mortgagor was not a condition precedent to liability of the third persons for the conversion.¹

b. Demand

Ordinarily a demand is not necessary where defendant's original taking was wrongful or a demand would be useless; but a demand is required where defendant was originally in rightful possession.

In an action by the mortgagee for conversion, a demand before suit is not necessary where there was an actual conversion² or where defendant did not come into possession lawfully.³ So in replevin by the mortgagee against a third person, no demand is necessary where the original taking is wrongful,⁴ or where defendant is guilty of actual conversion,⁵ or claims the right to retain possession.⁶ A demand is, however, necessary where defendant's possession is not wrongful.⁷

Slight inaccuracies

Efficacy of account, which on its face constitutes sufficient compliance with the statute, is not affected by inaccuracies as showing credit by cash when it was by goods, or by one or more of items of daily credit being composed of a collection of credits for several articles.—J. Inasmuch as it appeared that the mortgagees' debt against the mortgagor was not satisfied and exceeded the value of the property in controversy, they had a cause of action against defendants to which the mortgagor was not a

Although a mortgage stipulates that a mortgagee is entitled to possession after default, a demand for possession must be made on the mortgagor before replevin can be maintained against him,⁸ unless there has been an actual conversion,⁹ or unless the mortgagor denies the mortgagee's right to possession,¹⁰ or it is apparent that a demand would be unavailing.¹¹ In replevin by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, no demand and refusal need be shown, where defendant places his defense on the right of possession at the time of the commencement of the action.¹² When the mortgagee becomes entitled to possession because of the maturity of the mortgage debt, it has been held that a previous demand is not necessary to support detinue,¹³ and a voluntary promise, without consideration, to postpone the date for surrendering the property to the mortgagee does not render a new demand for delivery before the postponed date necessary.¹⁴ After the mortgagor has disposed of the mortgaged property and thereby put it beyond his power to comply with a demand, a demand is not a condition precedent to a mortgagee's action against him for conversion.¹⁵

Demand for payment. An action for the possession of the mortgaged chattels may be maintained by the mortgagee against the mortgagor after default without a demand for payment of the notes secured.¹⁶ A demand for payment of the debt is required, however, where it is necessary in order to establish a default.¹⁷ Where the mortgagor has sold the property for his own benefit, a demand for payment of the debt is not a condition precedent to an action of trover.¹⁸

On whom demand may be made. If demand is necessary, it is sufficient to make it on the agent or the bailee in possession of the property.¹⁹

§ 234. — Demand in Action against Levying Officer

Demand on a levying officer is not necessary if plaintiff mortgagee has an immediate right to possession; otherwise it is.

In the absence of statute it is not necessary for a mortgagee, with an immediate right to possession, to make a demand on an officer levying an execution or attachment writ on the mortgaged property, before commencing an action of replevin to recover it²⁰ or trover for the value thereof.²¹ Where the mortgagee did not have an immediate right of possession, so that the taking was not wrongful as to him, a demand is necessary,²² but after demand replevin can be brought.²³

Where a default occurs in a condition of the mortgage after the chattel has been taken on execution against the mortgagor, the mortgagee may maintain replevin against the levying officer without first demanding the mortgage debt from the mortgagor or the officer.²⁴

§ 235. Time to Sue and Limitations

The mortgagee's action must be brought within the time limited by statute.

Lawful distress

Where landlord acquired possession of tenant's chattels through its bailiff by lawful distress, tenant's mortgagee could not maintain replevin where it was not made to appear that demand was made prior to institution of action.—*Resnick v. Actions for the possession of the mortgaged chattels must be brought within the time limited by the statutes in the various jurisdictions, even though the lien on the chattels created by the mortgage is not barred by the statute limiting the time for the recovery of the chattel.²⁵ Where a mortgagee's action is for a fraudulent removal of the property by a third person, the statute of limitations begins to run in defendant's favor from the time of removal, except where it is not apparent at the time that he intends to convert them, in which case the statute of limitations will not begin to run against the mortgagee's cause of action for a conversion of such chattels until the mortgagee, in the exercise of due diligence, discovers the fraud.²⁶ The mortgagee's right of action against a pledgee for conversion accrues at the time of the conversion.²⁷

§ 236. Defenses

As shown in the following three sections, in an action by a chattel mortgagee against the mortgagor or a third person, defendant may interpose any proper defense which tends to defeat plaintiff's recovery, including, in some jurisdictions, set-off and counterclaim.

§ 237. — By Mortgagor against Mortgagee

fense which goes to defeat the mortgagee's right to recover, and, conversely, can interpose only such defenses.

The mortgagor will not be allowed to assert as against the mortgagee that the mortgage was made in fraud of creditors,²⁸ that he signed the mortgage without reading it,²⁹ or that the lien of the mortgage has been terminated by his own wrongful act;³⁰ neither can he rely on a partial failure of consideration,³¹ part payment of the debt,³² or a voluntary promise, without consideration, to postpone the date for surrendering the property to the mortgagee.³³ Moreover, the fact that the mortgagee prior to the determination of the case sold the replevined property cannot affect the issues in the case.³⁴ It has been held that defendant cannot assert that the property mortgaged did not belong to him,³⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.³⁶ Such defenses as payment of the entire debt,³⁷ failure of the mortgagee to furnish a verified statement of his account as required by statute,³⁸ title or right of possession in a third party,³⁹ invalidity of the mortgage,⁴⁰ fraud in procurement,⁴¹ duress,⁴² absence of consideration,⁴³ and breach of warranty⁴⁴ may be interposed. So, replevin being a possessory action, it is a defense that the property sued for was in possession of purchasers from defendant mortgagor.⁴⁵ Where permitted by statute, defendant in detinue on a chattel mortgage may plead any

(2) However it was subsequently held: "The plea of breach of warranty is the substantial equivalent of the plea of total or partial failure of consideration, and may be shown as a defense pro tanto in a replevin action between the original parties based upon a chattel mortgage given to secure the purchase price of the property covered by the mortgage.—

In Alabama, under the code provision that a defendant in detinue by a mortgagee "may plead any matter of defense that he might have pleaded if the action had been on the debt," etc., a defendant, in detinue by a mortgagee in a mortgage to secure purchase-money notes given by defendant on buying personality, may set up breach of warranty in the sale or false representations made by the mortgagee which induced defendant to buy, for the purpose of defeating the action.—McDaniel v. Sullivan, 39 So. 355, 144 Ala. 583—Hood v. Jenkins, 75 So. 871, 16 Ala. App. 180, certiorari denied Ex parte Hood, 76 So. 741, 200 Ala. 543.

defense which might be made to the debt.⁴⁶ In some jurisdictions, either a legal or an equitable defense may be set up;⁴⁷ but a statute so providing does not create any new defenses or make that a defense which was not theretofore a defense either at law or in equity.⁴⁸

In replevin by a second mortgagee the mortgagor cannot defend because of a prior outstanding mortgage on the property where it is not shown that the owner of the prior mortgage has demanded possession so as to entitle him thereto.⁴⁹

§ 238. — By Third Person against Mortgagee

Defenses tending to defeat the cause of action may be interposed in an action by a chattel mortgagee against a third person.

Although a wrongdoer cannot set up this defense,⁵⁰ ordinarily, a third person may assert that the mortgage is void,⁵¹ for example, because of the absence of a consideration⁵² or because it is not recorded.⁵³ Further, he may show that the property has been released,⁵⁴ that the mortgagee has waived all claims under the mortgage,⁵⁵ that the possession of the mortgagor was fraudulent as to him,⁵⁶ or that the mortgage debt has been discharged,⁵⁷ as by proving an application of property in satisfaction;⁵⁸ but in order that payment of the mortgage debt shall constitute a defense to an action brought by a mortgagee against a third person for the mortgaged chattels, it must be shown that payment was made before the suit was instituted.⁵⁹ A third person who without notice of a preëxisting mortgage made advances on the mortgaged chattel can defend the mortgagee's action for wrongful concealment and disposition on the ground of good faith.⁶⁰ It is, however, no defense that the mortgagor's assignee in bankruptcy might assert that the mortgage was invalid;⁶¹ nor that such part of the mortgaged property as could be found had been previously sold on foreclosure;⁶² nor that there was a parol understanding between the mortgagor and the mortgagee respecting the possession of mortgaged chattels;⁶³ nor that the property was subject to prior mortgages under which defendant was not claiming;⁶⁴ nor that the mortgagee has not obtained judgment against the mortgagor;⁶⁵ nor that the mortgagee took over part of the property mortgaged at the request of the mortgagor and disposed of it without foreclosure, where the property so taken was in part worthless and the value of the remainder was not shown;⁶⁶ nor that defendant in replevin made permanent repairs on the chattels.⁶⁷ In a mortgagee's action in detinue against mortgagors, an intervener, who was not privy to the mortgages, could not complain that one of the mortgages was not due.⁶⁸ Although the mortgagee may be obliged to recognize and protect it, a landlord's lien is no bar to a mortgagee's action of replevin.⁶⁹ Part payment of the mortgage debt will not defeat an action of replevin by the mortgagee to recover possession of the property from a third person,⁷⁰ and irregularities in a foreclosure taking place after action is begun are not a defense, as against plaintiff entitled to possession at the commencement of the action.⁷¹ In an action against a third person for conversion, it has been held that it is no defense that the mortgagors have recovered the value of the mortgaged property in an independent action;⁷² but in claims based on the same tort, ordinarily, recovery for the full amount of the damage cannot be had by both mortgagor and mortgagee,⁷³ and recovery of the full amount by the mortgagor will bar an action by the mortgagee.⁷⁴ Defendant cannot urge his own wrong as a defense to plaintiff's claim, as by pleading failure of plaintiffs to take timely possession of the chattel after maturity of the debt, where defendant, with actual notice of the mortgage, took and held possession of the property under an inferior claim;⁷⁵ and a trespasser who has seized a portion of the mortgaged property cannot assert as a defense that the mortgagee thereafter has taken a decree of foreclosure against the remaining portion only.⁷⁶

In an action for conversion against an officer levying on the property and selling it, it is no defense that plaintiff took no legal steps to prevent the sale, nor is his failure to enter into a law suit with the purchaser at the sale, or to undertake to get possession of the property by force, a good defense; and the fact that the mortgagee could have replevied the property does not relieve the officer from liability.⁷⁷ A levying officer who sets up the consent of the mortgagee to the levy must show that the condition attached to the consent was complied with.⁷⁸

Outstanding title. A third person in trover⁷⁹ or replevin⁸⁰ may show that he holds under a title superior to that of the mortgagee. So, in detinue defendant may show a prior outstanding title in a stranger, although he does not connect himself with such title.⁸¹ Defendant destroying the mortgaged property long before the mortgagor's contract with the government expired cannot, as against the mortgagee, invoke the provisions of that contract whereby the property in question would become the property of the government if not removed within a certain time after expiration of the contract.⁸²

Other security. In an action for conversion it is no defense that there was property covered by the mortgage other than that which was converted by defendant to which plaintiff might resort;⁸³ nor that the mortgagor is solvent;⁸⁴ nor that the mortgagee possess other security.⁸⁵ So, where the property is taken on attachment it is no defense to replevin that it is sufficient to satisfy both the mortgage debt and the debt of the attaching creditor.⁸⁶ Under a statute providing that the mortgagee must resort to property of the mortgagor which the latter has not transferred since his mortgage was executed on the written demand of a subordinate claimant of other property in the mortgage, if he can do so without risk of loss, however, when the elements of the statute are present, it is available in defense of trover.⁸⁷

Validity of attachment claim. Where property which has been levied on in an action against a mortgagor is replevied from the officer by the mortgagee, it cannot be shown in defense to the replevin suit that the mortgage is in fraud of creditors without proof that the attachment debt in fact existed;⁸⁸ and, although the officer must act in reliance on valid process,⁸⁹ it is not sufficient merely to prove the existence of the writ of attachment.⁹⁰ So, an attaching creditor of a chattel mortgagor stands in the shoes of the mortgagor, and is no more entitled to defeat a possessory action of the junior mortgagee than would be the mortgagor, were he defendant in such action.⁹¹ It may be shown, however, that the mortgagee acquired the mortgaged chattels with notice of the attaching creditor's rights.⁹²

§ 239. Set-Off and Counterclaim

Whether a set-off or counterclaim may be permitted against a chattel mortgagee suing for possession must be determined under applicable statutory provisions.

In some jurisdictions no set-off or counterclaim is permitted in actions of replevin for the possession of the mortgaged property.⁹³ In other jurisdictions, however, a set-off or counterclaim may be asserted in possessory actions;⁹⁴ but the subject matter must fall within the general rules applicable to the propriety of set-off or counterclaim.⁹⁵

§ 240. Parties

- a. Plaintiffs
- b. Defendants
- c. Intervention

a. Plaintiffs

One in possession or entitled thereto as mortgagee is a proper party to bring the action, or it may be brought jointly by joint owners or possessors; and under some circumstances the mortgagor and mortgagee may join as parties plaintiff.

Mortgagees taking possession of property mortgaged to several to secure several notes, are to be regarded as joint owners and must sue jointly in replevin⁹⁶ or trespass.⁹⁷ The same rule applies as to property taken from the possession of the common agent of several mortgagees holding under distinct mortgages.⁹⁸ So, several mortgagees in joint possession under distinct mortgages may sue jointly for conversion.⁹⁹ Likewise, the mortgagees under mortgages which, although distinct, are in effect a single conveyance, may sue jointly for conversion.¹ It has been held, however, that, where several creditors are secured by the same mortgage and possession has not been taken thereunder, one or more of them may maintain replevin against a third person to recover the property;² and one of several joint mortgagees may bring replevin against the mortgagor without joining the others as plaintiffs.³

The owners of separate mortgages on the same chattel ordinarily cannot join as plaintiffs in replevin.

Set-off not extinguishing debt

Mortgagor has no right to claim or show set-off not extinguishing but merely reducing the amount owing.—Tropical Paint & Oil Co. v. Hall, 196 N.W. 354, 225 Mich. 293.

94. Or.—Corbin v. Preston, 218 P. 917, 109 Or. 230.
11 C.J. p 609 note 35.

In Arkansas, neither Kirby Dig. § 6869, authorizing defendants in replevin for recovery of personal property for purpose of foreclosure to set off payments made, nor Acts 1917 p 1441, authorizing counterclaims in actions for the recovery of money, authorizes a counterclaim in replevin suits to recover possession of personal property for purpose of foreclosing mortgages or deeds of trust, but they only authorize a set-off against mortgage indebtedness by way of extinguishing or reducing it.—Jones v. Blythe, 210 S.W. 348, 138 Ark. 81.

In North Dakota, the right to counterclaim depends on statute, and it was held that where the alleged counterclaim is not in contract, does not arise out of the contract set forth in the complaint, and is not connected with the subject matter of the action, it will not lie. Thus, where plaintiff proved its right to possession of the property described in the complaint and directed the sheriff to take the property, defendant's counterclaim on the ground that the sheriff took property other than the property described and the taking of which caused them damage, cannot be maintained. It was intimated, however, that if the finding was that defendant was entitled to the return of the property, counterclaim might lie.—First Guaranty Bank v. Rex Theater Co., 195 N.W. 564, 50 N.D. 322.

Accounting for market value

Where replevying mortgagee sells the property without having it at the place of sale, as a result of which it was sold at great sacrifice, the right of the mortgagor to hold the mortgagee to an accounting for the market value of the property may be made available as a counterclaim in the action for claim and delivery.—Nance v. King, 101 S.E. 212, 178 N.C. 574.

Claim for work and labor

Permitting set-off of claim for work and labor was proper as showing that defendant was not indebted to plaintiff at time action, tried on theory of replevin, was commenced.—Jones v. Parker, 273 P. 687, 39 Wyo. 423.

in against a third person,⁴ although it has been held under code provisions in some jurisdictions that successive mortgagees may join in replevin mortgaged property where possession had not been had on any of the mortgages.⁵

An agent of the mortgagee who has taken possession with the consent of the mortgagor is entitled to sue in his own name in replevin against the mortgagor taking the property from his possession.⁶ One who takes a mortgage of chattels in his own name, but in fact for the benefit of another, may maintain replevin for such chattels in his own name, without joining such other person.⁷

Where the mortgage is in the form of a deed of trust, the trustee alone is authorized to sue to recover the property on breach of conditions imposed,⁸ or to recover the property from a third person.⁹

Since the interests of the mortgagor and the mortgagee are in conflict, it would seem on principle that they cannot join in replevin for the mortgaged property,¹⁰ although there is authority for allowing the mortgagee to join to assert his lien.¹¹ So, a mortgagee in possession hiring the chattels to another need not make the mortgagor a party to an action for the amount due.¹² However, the mortgagor and the mortgagee may join in an action for conversion¹³ or for damages to the mortgaged chattel,¹⁴ and in an action by the mortgagee against a tort-feasor for destruction of the mortgaged property, defendant may cause the mortgagor and other interested parties to be brought into court to protect him from a second action.¹⁵

Joinder of the mortgagee in the mortgagor's action against a third person is treated supra § 227.

b. Defendants

Only the wrongdoer is a necessary party defendant to the mortgagee's action, although the mortgagor may be a proper party in an action against a third person for conversion.

Actions for the possession of mortgaged property must be brought against the party in possession,¹⁶ and it is, as a general rule, unnecessary to join other parties,¹⁷ although in an action against the mortgagor to recover possession, a prior mortgagee also claiming the property is a necessary defendant.¹⁸

The mortgagee may maintain trover against a third party converting the chattels, without making the mortgagor a party to the suit,¹⁹ although he may do so if he wishes;²⁰ and although it has been said that plaintiff should make the purchasers parties defendant if he does not show that the property has been taken beyond the jurisdiction of the court,²¹ it has been held not to be essential to join all of various purchasers of the property at an execution sale in a suit against the judgment creditor for conversion.²² So, where there was no community of wrongdoing, it was held improper to join as defendant the purchaser of a mortgaged chattel

Transferred cause

Where, in suit to foreclose chattel mortgage and collect note, plaintiffs alleged that third parties had converted cotton covered by mortgage and on plea of privilege the cause as to conversion was transferred to county court of another county, the mortgagor was not a necessary party to the action for conversion, the amount of plaintiffs' debt remaining after the foreclosure exceeding the value of the converted property.—Fussell & Irvin v. c. Intervention

Any person having an adverse interest in the subject matter of the suit may, as a rule, intervene, although he is not required to do so.

Under the statutory rules applicable to civil actions generally, any person having an interest in the matter in litigation, or who has an interest adverse to both parties, may intervene,²⁴ but the intervener must accept the suit as he finds it, and is bound by the record of the case at the time of his intervention.²⁵ No duty to intervene, however, rests on a prior mortgagee when a subsequent one brings replevin for the mortgaged property, but he may institute a separate action under his own mortgage.²⁶

§ 241. Pleading

- a. Complaint, declaration, or petition
- b. Plea or answer
- c. Replication or reply
- d. Amended or supplemental pleadings
- e. Issues, proof, and variance

a. Complaint, Declaration, or Petition

Plaintiff must allege all facts necessary to state a cause of action, including ownership and possession, defendant's wrongful act, damages, and, under some circumstances, nonpayment or default, demand, value of the property, and recording of the mortgage.

The general rules applicable to the form of action adopted govern the mortgagee's pleadings in an action by him in replevin²⁷ or trover,²⁸ or for interference with, or destruction of, his lien.²⁹

Mortgage. While a copy of the mortgage may be filed with, and annexed to, the petition,³⁰ it will not, in the absence of statute, obviate the necessity of setting out in the complaint all the facts essential to the statement of a cause of action.³¹ Where, without referring to a mortgage filed with the complaint, a cause of action in replevin is stated, the complaint is not demurrable because of uncertainty in the mortgage.³²

Ownership and possession. In an action for the possession of the mortgaged chattels, plaintiff must allege ownership in himself,³³ possession in defendant,³⁴ and right of possession in plaintiff;³⁵ and it is not sufficient to allege merely that plaintiff is en-

Regularity of writ

A second mortgagee intervening in a prior mortgagee's action in detinue against the mortgagor cannot question the regularity of the writ of seizure under which the chattels were held by the first mortgagee when the intervention was made, especially where the complaint and writ were not void on their face.—Faulk v. Notice of mortgage

In an action to recover personalty, taken under execution by defendant as constable, it is proper to allege that the execution creditor had knowledge of the mortgage, since notice to him is binding on the officer, who is only an agent.—Starr v. Cox, 57 P. 247, 9 Kan.App. 882.

titled to possession.³⁶

In an action for conversion, plaintiff must allege that he was in possession³⁷ or, if he was not in possession, that he was entitled to the immediate possession,³⁸ and he must allege his special interest or ownership.³⁹

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁴⁰ in some jurisdictions it is sufficient for plaintiff to allege generally that he is the owner⁴¹ and is entitled to possession,⁴² and it is not necessary to notify defendant of the precise nature of plaintiff's title⁴³ or plead evidential facts which would, on the trial, establish his interest.⁴⁴ However, where general allegations of ownership and right of possession are accompanied by recitals alleging a special interest or ownership by virtue of a chattel mortgage, the sufficiency of the general allegations is governed by the special recitals,⁴⁵ and the pleading must set up facts showing the special interest or ownership⁴⁶ and also the facts entitling plaintiff to possession.⁴⁷ Except where such an allegation is made imperative by an application of the rules last stated,⁴⁸ it is not necessary to allege that the mortgagor was owner of the property when the mortgage was executed.⁴⁹ Where the mortgagee is in possession under his mortgage, he may sue for a conversion of the mortgaged property without alleging the details of his mortgage lien,⁵⁰ or to recover possession when it is taken from him by a stranger, without alleging that any condition of the mortgage has been broken.⁵¹ So, in the absence of a demurrer, a complaint which fails to allege specifically that the mortgagee is entitled to possession is not fatally defective where the mortgage attached to the complaint shows on its face that the mortgagee is entitled to possession.⁵²

Taking and detention. While it is necessary for plaintiff in an action for conversion to allege that defendant's acts which deprived him of the property were wrongful,⁵³ it is not necessary specifically to allege that the taking was wrongful where that may be inferred from the language of the complaint,⁵⁴ but it seems that a proper pleading must allege the time and place of conversion.⁵⁵ An allegation that defendant "retains" possession is a

Allegation of conversion

Mortgagee, alleging that mortgagor left the state and that defendant had taken and converted the mortgaged property to his own use, sufficiently alleged that the taking was wrongful.—Barnett Bros. Mercantile Co. v. Jarrett, supra.

55. Tex.—Callihan v. Fort Worth sufficient allegation of detention.⁵⁶ In an action based on an attachment sale of the mortgaged property, the petition should allege that the property was not sold subject to the mortgage⁵⁷ and, if the purchasers of the property are not made parties defendant, it should further show that the property has been taken beyond the jurisdiction of the court.⁵⁸

Nonpayment or default. In trover⁵⁹ or replevin⁶⁰ it is, according to the general rule, unnecessary for the mortgagee to allege that the mortgage has not been satisfied, payment being a matter of defense.⁶¹ In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that it is essential to an action for conversion that the mortgagee allege that the mortgage debt is unpaid,⁶² and in actions of replevin, it is similarly held that allegations of defendant's default are necessary.⁶³ A default in the condition of the mortgage need not be alleged specifically when a default is clearly implied from the facts stated,⁶⁴ or where there is a copy of the mortgage attached to the petition, which shows on its face that the conditions therein have been broken.⁶⁵

Demand. Where the mortgagor is entitled to possession until demand, it has been held that a petition in replevin by the mortgagee against him or one holding under him should allege a demand or facts sufficient to authorize proof of a waiver;⁶⁶ but, on the other hand, the fact that the mortgagors were rightfully in possession has been held not to make allegation of a demand necessary, that being a matter of proof, and not pleading.⁶⁷ Plaintiff is not required to allege a demand for payment of the mortgage indebtedness in order to show his right to possession, where he alleges that he was in possession by agreement with the mortgagor.⁶⁸ Where the mortgagee is entitled to possession on demand, a complaint in an action against a third person for damages is not demurrable for failure to allege specifically the time of demand.⁶⁹

Value of property. In an action for conversion of the mortgaged property it is in some jurisdictions necessary to aver its value⁷⁰ at the time and place of conversion,⁷¹ or the value of plaintiff's interest therein;⁷² but, in an action for conversion of part of the mortgaged property, it is not necessary to plead and prove the value of the entire property.⁷³ So, in an action by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, to recover possession of the property for the purpose of foreclosure, an averment of value is not necessary,⁷⁴ the petition in such case being sufficient if it sets up the facts of a breach of the conditions in the mortgage entitling plaintiff to possession.⁷⁵

Record. Where defendant did not have actual notice of the mortgage and possession was not taken by the mortgagee, it is necessary that a complaint for conversion allege that the mortgage was recorded as required by statute,⁷⁶ and the same is true in replevin.⁷⁷ Such an allegation may be supplied by reasonable intendment.⁷⁸ It is not necessary to allege that the mortgage was properly acknowledged if it is alleged that it was duly recorded in the proper office, as the latter allegation carries with it the implication that the mortgage had been duly prepared for record before it was recorded.⁷⁹

sion, it must appear that it was not executed for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding the creditors of the mortgagor does not require an allegation that the mortgage was not executed for such purpose as to an action begun at the time of its passage.⁸⁰ Under statutes providing that the question of fraudulent intent shall be one of fact in all cases, it is not necessary that the complaint by a mortgagee out of possession contain an averment that the mortgage was executed in good faith.⁸¹

Damages. In an action for conversion plaintiff mortgagee must allege that he was damaged.⁸²

Cross petition. In replevin by a second mortgagee against the mortgagor and holders of a prior mortgage in possession, where the mortgagor files a cross petition asserting payment of the first mortgage, and that he is the owner, subject only to the lien of plaintiff, he may set up against his codefendants a claim for unliquidated damages from transactions connected with their possession of the property.⁸³

b. Plea or Answer

The sufficiency of defendant's plea or answer is controlled by general rules of pleading, more particularly, those applicable to the specific form of action involved.

Defendant's pleadings in an action of replevin by a chattel mortgagee are subject to the rules applicable to that form of action generally.⁸⁴ A general denial sufficiently states a defense to the action in some jurisdictions⁸⁵ and it is held that defendant may avail himself thereunder of such special matters constituting a defense as fraud,⁸⁶ usury,⁸⁷ estoppel,⁸⁸ duress,⁸⁹ want of consideration,⁹⁰ or absence of right to possession.⁹¹ In other jurisdictions, however, it is necessary to plead such defenses as fraud,⁹² mistake,⁹³ or invalidity of the contract;⁹⁴ and defendant relying on a title or lien superior to that of the mortgagee must allege the facts on which such claim is based.⁹⁵ The same rule applies where defendant relies on a release of the mortgage⁹⁶ or a forfeiture of its lien,⁹⁷ or on the fact that he is a bona fide purchaser.⁹⁸ The defense in trover that the mortgagee enforcing the mortgage did not exercise good faith, being in the nature of release, should be specially pleaded.⁹⁹ Where plaintiff in replevin, claiming as mortgagee, in his complaint declares generally as an owner entitled to possession, defendant, under general denial, may prove payment of the debt secured by the mortgage,¹ but, where the pleadings disclose plaintiff's source of title as resting on a note and chattel mortgage, the defense of payment must be pleaded.² Where, in defense to an action for conversion of the mortgaged chattels by sale, defendant relies on an authorization to sell, he must allege it positively and not by way of recital.³ If defendant relies on fraud, he must allege the facts out of which the fraud is supposed to arise;⁴ yet it has been held that, under a plea of non est factum, defendant may show fraud in the procurement of his signature to the mortgage.⁵ In some jurisdictions, under statutes authorizing the jury to ascertain the amount due on the mortgage debt, it is not necessary for the mortgagor to set up a counterclaim in order to have the value of the mortgagee's interest determined.⁶

Plaintiff may reply to new matter pleaded in the answer.

In an action of detinue by a mortgagee against the mortgagor, in which the mortgagor defends on the ground that there was fraud in the procurement of the mortgage, plaintiff may reply that the mortgagor knew of its invalidity before the action was brought, but had failed to tender back the consideration.⁷ Plaintiff may substantiate allegations of general ownership by proof of special property by virtue of the mortgage, even though defendant had no opportunity to challenge the validity of the mortgage, if the reply alleged the execution of the mortgage.⁸

d. Amended or Supplemental Pleadings

The pleadings may be amended if a new cause of action or defense is not thereby set up.

In accordance with the general rule, the pleadings may be amended, if thereby a new cause of action or defense is not set up;⁹ and a mortgagee suing in detinue may be permitted to amend his complaint by adding a count on the note secured.¹⁰ The failure of the declaration or petition, in an action for conversion, to allege that plaintiff had possession, or the right to possession, at the time of the conversion may be remedied by amendment even after the cause is pending, on motion for new trial and in arrest of judgment.¹¹ The petition may be amended so as to change a general to a special allegation of ownership.¹²

Where replevin brought to recover mortgaged chattels was changed by amendment to an action to foreclose a lien thereon, such amendment operated to terminate the replevin action, and entitled defendant to a restoration of the property taken under the writ, in the absence of an attachment issued against the property.¹³

e. Issues, Proof, and Variance

The pleadings and proofs must conform, but minor discrepancies will be disregarded; and evidence tending to support the pleadings is admissible thereunder.

As in other civil actions, the pleadings and proof must conform in an action by the mortgagee against third persons.¹⁴ If there is a substantial correspondence between the allegations and the proof, minor discrepancies will be disregarded.¹⁵ An intervening claimant in the mortgagee's detinue action cannot raise an issue of the mortgagee's right to possession as against the mortgagor, the issue being whether the mortgagee had the right to possession as against the intervening claimant when the claim suit was instituted.¹⁶

When defendant in detinue pleaded that the mortgage under which plaintiff claims was given to compromise a prosecution, evidence which tends to establish that fact is admissible.¹⁷ In replevin by a second mortgagee against the mortgagor and the holders of a prior mortgage in possession, plaintiff, without pleading payment or satisfaction of the prior mortgage, may offer proof of payment or satisfaction, or any fact defeating its priority;¹⁸ and the fact that he pleads that the first mortgage was fully paid will not prevent proof of satisfaction otherwise than by payment of money.¹⁹ A complaint pleading the value of live stock replevined by a mortgagor from third person claiming an agister's lien did not bar testimony as to a lesser value, nor require judgment in the pleaded sum for defendant.²⁰ Evidence that plaintiff waived his prior lien may be submitted to the jury, even though the waiv-

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

As in other civil cases, the burden is on plaintiff to establish a prima facie case and on defendant to overcome it, or establish his affirmative defenses.

As in other civil actions, the burden rests on the mortgagee to establish the facts constituting his cause of action for the possession²⁶ or conversion²⁷ of the mortgaged property. Hence plaintiff must show title and right to possession in himself, in order to sustain trover,²⁸ replevin,²⁹ or detinue,³⁰ and in the last named action he must prove that defendant had possession.³¹ Where such facts are essential to the validity of the mortgage lien, plaintiff must show that the mortgage has been properly recorded,³² or that defendant had actual notice of its existence.³³ So when in issue, the burden is on the mortgagee to prove the execution of the mortgage,³⁴ its validity,³⁵ the indebtedness secured thereby,³⁶ default,³⁷ the interest of the mortgagor,³⁸ the value of the mortgagee's interest at the time of the alleged wrong;³⁹ and waiver of prior liens;⁴⁰ and it has been held that a mortgagee suing for conversion must show that he held under a valid mortgage, which, if he recovered, would inure to the benefit of the one charged with converting or, at least, give the one so charged the same right to the property that he had.⁴¹

When plaintiff has made a prima facie case, defendant relying thereon as a defense has the burden of showing that he is entitled to be subrogated to a landlord's lien for advances,⁴² and where he asserts a right superior to that of the mortgagee the burden is on him to prove it.⁴³ However, the mere fact that defendant has claimed ownership in his answer does not cast on him the primary burden of proving such claim by a preponderance of the evidence, since the claim amounts only to a general denial and not to the pleading of new matter.⁴⁴ It has been held necessary to show the validity of the mortgage before any question can be raised as to the soundness of an attachment claim.⁴⁵ Where a sheriff is sued by a junior chattel mortgagee for taking goods under a prior mortgage, the burden of proving an intent of the owner and of the mortgagee to defraud creditors, in executing the subsequent mortgage, is on such defendant.⁴⁶

Production of note and mortgage. Where it appears in a mortgagee's action of replevin that the mortgage was given in security of a promissory note shown to be past due at the time of suit, and the grounds of recovery are denied by defendant, proof of plaintiff's right of recovery requires the production of the note in evidence, where it is shown that such note is in the possession of plaintiff.⁴⁷ So an alleged mortgagee suing an officer for levying on mortgaged property, must produce the note and mortgage in evidence or account for their absence and prove their contents;⁴⁸ and this principle has been recognized in an action on his bond against a mortgagee failing to prosecute his replevin suit.⁴⁹

Identity of property. Plaintiff has the burden of identifying the property in controversy with that described in the mortgage, both in replevin⁵⁰ and in trover;⁵¹ but where it is established that defendant in replevin wrongfully took the property

Crop mortgages

(1) A mortgagee claiming conversion of crops must show crops on which lien was claimed were sown or caused to be sown by mortgagor.—Forbush v. San Diego Fruit & Produce Co., supra.

(2) So such mortgagee is required to show that, at time mortgage was executed, mortgagor had an interest in, or the right to cultivate, land on which the crop was grown.—Kelley v. Cassels, 147 So. 597, 226 Ala. 410.

(3) A similar rule was applied in an action on the case for preventing enforcement of equitable mortgage.—Benson Hardware Co. v. Wilder Mercantile Co., 73 So. 4, 197 Ala. 703.

(4) It has been held in detinue, however, that the mortgagor had burden to show he had no interest in land on which crop was grown when mortgage was made in order to defeat mortgage.—Sims v. United Auto Supply Co., 129 So. 53, 221 Ala. 333.

Presumption

As bearing on question of whether warehouseman waived lien by "voluntarily" delivering goods to plaintiff without requiring the latter to identify them as the chattels called for by the writ of replevin, plaintiff in replevin is presumed to have known goods on which it had chattel mortgages, so that sheriff's receipt of more than it was entitled to and retention was equivalent to directing sheriff to take such property.—*Zahner Mfg. Burden on intervenor

Although chattel mortgages, under which intervenor claimed property delivered to it by sheriff in claim and delivery proceedings, were registered before registration of mortgages under which plaintiff claimed, burden was on intervenor to offer evidence from greater weight of which jury could find that property seized by sheriff was same as that conveyed in mortgages to intervenor.—*Cotter-Underwood Co. v. from the possession of the mortgagee, the burden is on him to establish that the property taken was not covered by the mortgage,⁵² and a similar rule has been applied in an action for conversion.⁵³

Good faith. In some jurisdictions under the statutes relative to the effect of retention of possession by the mortgagor the burden of showing good faith in the mortgage is imposed on the mortgagee, where the mortgagor has been allowed to retain such possession,⁵⁴ but in the absence of statute it is not essential that the mortgagee establish that his mortgage was taken in good faith.⁵⁵ Where the mortgagee establishes his title and attacks as fraudulent a transaction whereby the intervener claimed title, the burden shifts to the intervener to show clearly and satisfactorily the good faith of the transaction.⁵⁶ The burden is on defendant mortgagor in detinue by the mortgagee who has possessed himself of the property under the mortgage to show the mortgagee did not act in good faith.⁵⁷

Payment. If defendant sets up payment of the mortgage the burden of proving this defense is on him.⁵⁸ Proof of the fact of payment casts back on the mortgagee the burden of proving that the right or claim to the property was continuing.⁵⁹

against one claiming to be a bona fide purchaser, it has been held that the burden is on defendant to make satisfactory proof of purchase and payment,⁶⁰ whereupon the burden shifts, and plaintiff must show that defendant, before payment, had actual or constructive notice of the mortgage lien asserted, or facts sufficient to put him on inquiry, which, if followed up, would have shown the lien.⁶¹ Even though a purchaser of mortgaged property is not chargeable with notice of a recorded mortgage on account of defective description of the property, the burden is on him to show that his dealings with the mortgaged property were in good faith.⁶²

b. Admissibility

Any relevant and competent evidence material to the issues of the case is admissible in a mortgagee's action.

Under the rules applicable to civil actions generally evidence in an action by the chattel mortgagee must be competent and relevant to the issues.⁶³ Subject to this rule evidence is admissible to establish the execution of the mortgage,⁶⁴ the identity of the property,⁶⁵ the relations between parties,⁶⁶ the right to possession,⁶⁷ the purpose of the mortgagee in demanding possession,⁶⁸ the title of the mortgagor⁶⁹ or his possession,⁷⁰ the validity of the mort-

Mountain River Dairy Farm, 168 So. 439, 232 Ala. 391.

(5) To warrant finding that defendant became claimant's tenant

the evidence is conflicting;¹⁰ if the proof raises an issue of fact on a material question it should be submitted to the jury for determination.¹¹ If there is no material question of fact for submission to the jury on which there is any substantial controversy, the court may direct a verdict.¹²

Applying these rules, it is the province of the jury to determine questions of fact,¹³ such as performance of the conditions of the mortgage,¹⁴ consideration for an extension of the mortgage debt,¹⁵ whether the mortgage was given to defraud creditors or for a valuable consideration,¹⁶ whether mortgagee has such title or right of possession as entitles him to sue,¹⁷ whether officers in possession of the property exceeded their authority in refusing to surrender the property to the mortgagee,¹⁸ the character of defendant's possession,¹⁹ the quantity of mortgaged property in defendant's possession,²⁰ whether an attachment creditor of the mortgagor was a creditor in fact,²¹ whether the debt secured by the mortgage has been paid,²² whether the mortgagee had waived his lien²³ or authorized the mortgagor to sell the property,²⁴ whether plaintiff had notice of defendant's claims,²⁵ whether defendant assented to the mortgage,²⁶ facts fixing the venue of the action,²⁷ whether the mortgagor of a crop had an interest in the land on which the crop was grown at the date of the mortgage,²⁸ and whether the mortgagors had title to the property at the time of the execution of the mortgage.²⁹

It is the province of the court, and not of the jury, to determine questions of law,³⁰ such as after chattel mortgage lien was created.—Gillespie v. Bartlett & Byers, 100 So. 858, 211 Ala. 560.

whether a retaking of the property by a party to the mortgage under color of right is malicious,³¹ or questions depending on a construction of the mortgage.³² Whether an action for conversion was prosecuted with "reasonable diligence" within a statute relating to the measure of damages is a question of law;³³ and on a question of title to personalty between certain mortgagees and a purchaser from the vendor of the mortgagees, the ownership of the property at the time of the execution of the mortgage is a question of law, dependent on findings of facts as to the possession of the property at the time of the mortgage.³⁴

b. Instructions

Correct instructions should be given on all matters put in issue by pleadings and proof.

The court should fairly submit to the jury instructions embodying a correct statement of the law applicable to the issues and facts,³⁵ and should inform the jury of the exact status of the case under the pleadings and evidence,³⁶ but in accordance with well-settled rules of practice, the instructions must be strictly confined to the issues and proof.³⁷ An instruction leaving it to the jury to say what is a valid mortgage, without telling what constitutes such mortgage, is erroneous.³⁸ The fact that the court in referring to plaintiff in its instructions used the word "owner" is immaterial,³⁹ and a failure to charge in regard to a point not in issue is not a ground for a new trial.⁴⁰ Requested instructions which are misleading should be refused,⁴¹ and if given they afford ground for a new trial.⁴² So, instructions that ignore matters in issue should be refused.⁴³ In determining the validity of the instructions, they are to be construed as a whole.⁴⁴ There is no error in refusing a requested instruction which is fully covered by other proper instructions.⁴⁵

c. Verdict and Findings

The verdict and findings should be reasonably definite and certain, conforming to the issues and proof and to the requirements of the particular form of action.

The verdict and findings must conform to the issues and proof,⁴⁶ and be reasonably definite and certain,⁴⁷ sufficiently identifying the property,⁴⁸ so that a judgment based on it can be enforced with reasonable certainty.⁴⁹ Where findings are required, there should be a finding on every material issue.⁵⁰

Where a third person is sued by a mortgagee for conversion, a verdict is sufficient when the jury find for the successful party generally,⁵¹ unless there are several mortgages given under different circumstances.⁵²

The verdict in replevin should be in the alternative for the recovery of the chattel or in case possession cannot be had, for a specified sum of money.⁵³ It must ordinarily determine the amount of the mortgagee's interest in, or claim on, the property,⁵⁴ but this principle, while applicable as between the mortgagee and the general owner has no application in an action by the mortgagee against a third person not the owner,⁵⁵ especially where there was no request for a finding as to the extent of the mortgagee's interest.⁵⁶ Where required by statute, the verdict must fix the value of the chattels at the time of trial or set forth the reason why the value

was not fixed.⁵⁷ Under statutes providing that defendant may show any payment which has been made on the mortgage and that judgment shall be rendered for the property or the amount due, the verdict should be such as to permit a judgment in accordance with the statute.⁵⁸ So, if the right of possession changes between the commencement of the action and the date of trial, the verdict and judgment should adjust the equities as they existed at the time of trial.⁵⁹ Where defendant prevails but does not ask for return of the property, a general verdict on his counterclaim for actual and punitive damages resulting to him from the unlawful taking has been held proper.⁶⁰

Under statutes so providing, in detinue by the mortgagee or his assignee against the mortgagor or one holding under him, defendant may on suggestion require the jury to ascertain the amount of the mortgage debt.⁶¹

§ 244. Judgment

The judgment should conform to the issues, proof, and findings, and, when required by the circumstances, should be in the alternative.

As in other civil actions the judgment in an action by the chattel mortgagee should conform to the issues, proof, and findings.⁶² A judgment in ex-

In South Carolina

In a claim and delivery action to recover possession of property covered by a chattel mortgage, the jury may be directed to find the property's real value and also plaintiff's interest therein, under the statute authorizing the answering of particular questions, and the fact that defendant mortgagor pleaded no counterclaim did not defeat his right to have the amount of the mortgagee's interest determined, especially as the statute authorizes the jury to find the amount due plaintiff. — *Greene v. Parties

(1) Chattel mortgagor, made party defendant in replevin action, although in default, was party to action, and judgment could be entered against mortgagor.—Wiggins v. Russell, 236 N.Y.S. 657, 227 App.Div. 742.

(2) Judgment for second mortgagees against conditional seller of mortgaged furniture for surplus proceeds of latter's unlawful resale thereof, after satisfaction of first

cess of the ad damnum is erroneous.⁶³

In an action by the mortgagee against the mortgagor for conversion of the mortgaged goods, a judgment for plaintiff in the alternative should be for a return of the property or for the payment of the mortgage debt and interest.⁶⁴ A mortgagee's judgment against a third person for a tort causing the destruction of the mortgaged property stands in the place of the mortgage, and the mortgagor is entitled to any surplus over the amount necessary to discharge the mortgage debt.⁶⁵ Sums collected from a second mortgagee on a judgment against him and the mortgagor for conversion should be credited on the judgment against the mortgagor,⁶⁶ and the sums collected from the mortgagor should be credited on the judgment against the subsequent mortgagee.⁶⁷ The satisfaction of a judgment for the conversion of a mortgaged chattel, the condition of which had been breached prior to the recovery of such judgment, gives a judgment debtor the full title of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee.⁶⁸

In replevin the judgment should describe the chattels definitely enough to enable the sheriff to execute the writ,⁶⁹ but where the complaint contains a definite description, merely listing them in the judgment and referring to the complaint is sufficient.⁷⁰ Property not covered by the mortgage but replevied by the mortgagee should be ordered returned to defendant.⁷¹ A judgment for plaintiff should be for the possession of the property or for its value not to exceed the amount of the mortgage debt with damages for detention;⁷² and if the judgment is for defendant it should, likewise, be in the alternative for the return of the property or its value if return cannot be had.⁷³ Where there are several defendants, the alternative money judgment is properly a joint one in favor of all defendants.⁷⁴ A statute providing that where the prevailing party is not in possession at the time of trial the judgment must always be in the alternative, for possession or value if possession cannot be had, does not apply, however, where the action was discontinued for want of jurisdiction.⁷⁵ Where there are several mortgages on the property in controversy, judgment for the aggregate indebtedness can be rendered, and the particular items need not be specified.⁷⁶ If at the time replevin is begun the mortgagee is not entitled to possession but becomes entitled pending the action, judgment should be against him for costs but without an order for the return of the property.⁷⁷ No sale of the property can be ordered in an action of replevin, for it is not a proceeding to foreclose.⁷⁸ Where the property was returned to defendant on execution of a delivery bond, judgment for plaintiff may be rendered against the sureties on the bond.⁷⁹ Where in replevin for goods sold by plaintiff to defendant and mortgage was proper, although second mortgagees' cross complaint was against mortgagors only, where all parties were before court and all facts entitling second mortgagee to relief granted were fully pleaded.—Walker v. Houston, 12 P.2d 952, 215 Cal. 742, 87 A.L.R. 337.

Trial of right of property

Judgment, in trial of right of property, is erroneous that does not merely subordinate and make attachment lien subject to mortgagee claimant's possessory right if claimant, if still holding possession, be successful in proceeding.—Sanders v. Farrier, Tex.Civ.App., 271 S.W. 293.

Unsecured debt

Where plaintiff brings replevin for mortgaged property, and includes in petition an item on open account not covered and secured by the mortgage, it is error to include such item in the alternative judgment.—Simpson v. Butts, 226 P. 332, 99 Okl. 168.

In Illinois, under the controlling statute, if the property was held for payment of money and plaintiff fails in his action, judgment in alternative that plaintiff either pay the bill or return the property is proper.—Nathan M. Stone Co. v. Ellerson, 230 Ill.App. 593.

covered by a chattel mortgage, defendant prevails on his cross bill for rescission, the judgment should award the chattels to plaintiff on placing defendant in statu quo.⁸⁰ Defendant cannot complain that the judgment did not expressly determine the question of title to all the property replevied, where the property was returned to him on his giving the requisite bond, so that his possession and title cannot be questioned by plaintiff.⁸¹ In an action to replevin chattels for nonpayment of the buyer's note secured by mortgage on the chattels, in which the buyer filed a counterclaim, if plaintiff's note with interest exceeds the amount defendant may recover on his counterclaim, then plaintiff would be entitled to recover in replevin, and his special interest in the chattel may be determined, and judgment given accordingly, but if recovery on defendant's counterclaim should equal or exceed the amount of plaintiff's note, then defendant should have judgment for the difference, and plaintiff would fail in replevin.⁸² Judgment against a labor lien claimant and in favor of a mortgagee whose mortgage has ceased to be a valid lien should condition possession on payment of defendant's lien.⁸³ A final judgment for plaintiff in replevin is an adjudication that a default existed on the chattel mortgage when the suit was commenced,⁸⁴ and determines disputed questions of fact raised at the trial.⁸⁵

In a suit in detinue by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, where plaintiff took the property under a replevy bond and foreclosed it under power of sale pending the detinue suit, it was proper for the judgment to show the balance of the mortgage debt ascertained by the verdict, representing the amount due after applying the proceeds of the foreclosure sale;⁸⁶ and where the mortgagee sues in detinue for possession of the chattel, and in another count sues on the note secured by the mortgage, and the jury return a verdict for plaintiff on both counts, a judgment is proper which provides that defendant's payment of the judgment on the note count, within the time fixed by law prior to the issuance of execution, should be in full satisfaction of the judgment rendered.⁸⁷

Costs may be taxed in plaintiff's favor although he proved title to only part of the property replevied, where defendant denied and contested his right to any of it.⁸⁸ Absence of a demand for possession, although not a defense to an action therefor, may be considered in awarding costs.⁸⁹

§ 245. Damages and Amount of Recovery

Except in so far as the mortgagee's recovery may be limited to his special interest in the property, his damages and the elements thereof are ascertained under rules of general application to the particular remedy invoked.

In trover by a mortgagee against the mortgagor or one holding under him for the conversion of the mortgaged property, the measure of damages is ordinarily held to be the amount of the mortgage debt and interest, not to exceed the value of the property.⁹⁰ In an action against a stranger or a

"Highest market value"

"Where a person brings an action for the recovery of damages for the conversion of property on which he had a chattel mortgage, within two or three weeks after he learns of the conversion, such action is prosecuted with reasonable diligence, and plaintiff may elect to recover the 'highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and the verdict without interest,' as provided by section 7168, subd. 2 of the Compiled Laws."—Nathan v. Sax Motor Co., 256 N.W. 228, 64 N.D. 773.

Manner of allowing credits on mortgage is immaterial where it

trespasser ab initio, however, the mortgagee may recover the full value of the property.⁹¹ As against a conditional seller of property mortgaged by the purchaser, the mortgagee can recover only the value of his special interest in the property;⁹² but where the conditional seller converted the property by reselling it after the mortgagee tendered the balance due him, plaintiff's damages are not limited to the difference between the proceeds of the resale and the balance due on the conditional sales contract, the measure of damages being the amount due under the mortgage including interest costs, and attorney's fees.⁹³

In some jurisdictions recovery of damages may include interest from the date of conversion,⁹⁴ the amount expended by plaintiff in following the property,⁹⁵ and attorney's fees where the mortgage provides that it shall cover the expenses of collection.⁹⁶ In a statute authorizing the mortgagee to recover the highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and verdict "without interest," the quoted words refer to interest on the market value, and do not preclude recovery of interest on the mortgage.⁹⁷ A mortgagee who accepts the net proceeds of a sale of a portion of the mortgaged chattels, knowing they were sold in violation of the terms of the mortgage, is not in a subsequent action for conversion entitled to recover the gross proceeds without deduction of the expenses usually incident to such transaction.⁹⁸ In an action against a warehouseman for conversion of chattels stored with the mortgagee's consent, the storage charges are deductible from the amount of plaintiff's recovery.⁹⁹ Amounts paid by defendant to satisfy claims against the property not constituting liens prior to the mortgage cannot be deducted from the mortgagee's recovery.¹ A landlord who intervenes claiming a superior lien on the crop can recover only an amount which will suffice completely to indemnify him from actual injury.²

Replevin. While in some jurisdictions a mortgagee's recovery is limited to his special interest in the property,³ ordinarily in replevin by the mortgagee, in case a return of the property cannot be had, the mortgagee is entitled to a judgment for the amount of his debt with interest and costs not in excess of the value of the property,⁴ together with, in some jurisdictions, where condition has been broken, interest on the value of the property from the time it was taken to the date of judgment.⁵ Likewise when conditions in a note secured by chattel mortgage making attorney's fee payable have been met, the fee is collectable in a replevin action for the mortgaged property,⁶ but there can be no recovery of attorney's fees in the absence of a provision therefor in the note or mortgage.⁷ The mortgagee, if successful, may recover damages for the detention of the property,⁸ the measure thereof merely went to amount due on mortgage and could not have extinguished mortgage debt and thus prevent recovery, and the assignment of error went to the rendition of a judgment for plaintiff and not to the amount thereof or the improper allowance of credits.—*Arnold v. Nominal damages being the interest on the value of the property during the period of detention, where such value does not exceed the mortgage debt;⁹ and where it is shown that both the taking and the detention were unlawful, he is entitled to recover the damages to the goods directly caused by the taking and detention,¹⁰ although the value of the goods is in excess of the amount due under the mortgage.¹¹ In the absence of possession or right of possession, however, the mortgagee cannot recover damages for being deprived of possession;¹² and where he is entitled to possession merely for the purpose of foreclosure he cannot recover the value of the use of the property as special damages for its detention.¹³ Where the mortgagees have taken possession before their right accrues and the mortgagor recovers possession of the property by replevin and sells it, the mortgagees are entitled to a judgment in the replevin action for the amount of their debt less the damages for the detention of, and damages to, the property, notwithstanding their debt is not yet due.¹⁴

Where plaintiff wrongfully seized the mortgaged property in the replevin action, defendant is entitled to recover such actual damages as are right and proper under the circumstances.¹⁵ So, where plaintiff converted the property seized, defendant is entitled to have the value of the property assessed as of the date it was taken¹⁶ and to recover the value of his interest therein¹⁷ together with damages for the detention where plaintiff was not entitled to possession at the time of the seizure of the property.¹⁸ A judgment in favor of the mortgagor

for damages should be reduced by the amount due to the mortgagee on the mortgage,¹⁹ unless that would result in allowing the mortgagee to collect his claim before it matured.²⁰ The foregoing rules apply on waiver by the mortgagor of return of the property wrongfully taken.²¹ Although damage resulting from detention will be presumed on judgment for recovery of the chattels by defendant, in the absence of evidence of the amount thereof only nominal damages can be allowed.²² So although judgment is for defendant, it should be for nominal damages in case the value of the property does not exceed the mortgage lien.²³ In an action for possession by the mortgagee on the ground that condition has been broken, defendant cannot recover special damages for an alleged wrongful taking by plaintiff unless such special damages are alleged in his pleading.²⁴ So where the mortgagee prematurely takes possession of the property in a claim and delivery action, but before the trial the mortgagor defaults, the mortgagor is entitled only to damages for unlawful detention and the costs of action.²⁵

In trespass against an officer taking the mortgaged property on execution against the mortgagor, and holding it until he was paid the amount of the execution and his fees by the mortgagee, the measure of damages is the amount paid with interest together with reasonable compensation for the taking and detention.²⁶

detained,²⁷ but where the mortgagee voluntarily promised to postpone the date for surrendering the property, and no demand was made, no damages for detention prior to suit filed should be awarded.²⁸ Under some statutes defendant may, upon suggestion, require the amount of the mortgage debt to be ascertained, in which case the issues are broadened so as to include every item due on the mortgage,²⁹ which should be ascertained as of the date of the trial, not of date suit brought.³⁰ Where defendant pleads breach of warranty by plaintiff as to the soundness of the property the purchase price of which constitutes the consideration of the mortgage, the defense, if sustained, reduces the amount of the mortgage debt by the difference between the agreed price and the real value at the time of the sale.³¹ Damages from seizure under the writ pleaded by defendant in set-off and recoupment cannot be recovered if too remote.³²

Injury to chattels. The measure of damages in an action at law by the mortgagee to recover for injury to the mortgaged property is the value of such property, not what the mortgagor may owe the mortgagee on the mortgage debt in an accounting between them;³³ but in an action by a mortgagee not entitled to possession to recover damages for the impairment of his security, it has been held that the damages depend upon the extent to which the lien has been impaired, and are confined to the loss suffered by the mortgagee for injury to his reversionary interest.³⁴ In an action for damages to property wrongfully removed but subsequently restored, the mortgagee can recover the difference in value before the wrong and afterward or the cost of repair, whichever is less.³⁵

Mitigation of damages. In mitigation of damages it can be shown that the mortgage was fraudulent as to creditors, although it covered exempt property only, and therefore could not be set aside,³⁶ or that plaintiff had received his debt out of the goods left in his possession;³⁷ but a return or a replacement of the goods after they have been converted,³⁸ or an application of the proceeds to pay off a lien which was prior to the mortgage,³⁹ cannot be shown in mitigation of damages. Actual payment on the debt will be considered in reduction of damages.⁴⁰

Exemplary damages. If the conversion was in reckless and wanton disregard of his rights, the mortgagee may recover exemplary damages,⁴¹ but not otherwise.⁴²

In an action by a junior mortgagee for conversion the rule stated in Corpus Juris, which has been cited with approval, is that he is entitled to recover the value of his interest in the mortgaged property, and the value of his interest is reduced by the amount due on the prior liens.⁴³

J. ACTIONS BETWEEN MORTGAGEES

§ 246. In General

Actions between mortgagees for possession of, or damages for injury to, the mortgaged property, which are specifically treated in §§ 247-254 of this Title are, in so far as such rules are applicable, governed by the same principles as control in an action by the mortgagee against the mortgagor or a third person; so it may be useful, by way of analogy, to refer to §§ 228-245 where actions of the latter type are treated in this Title.

§ 247. Right of Action

As shown infra §§ 248-250, either a junior or senior mortgagee may, where the facts authorize such relief, maintain an action such as trover, replevin, or detinue against other mortgagees or compel them to account for moneys derived from possession of the mortgaged chattels.

§ 248. — By Senior Mortgagee

Where the facts authorize such relief, a mortgagee can maintain trover, replevin, detinue or an action on the case against a subsequent mortgagee interfering with his possessory rights or reversionary interest in the mortgaged chattel.

Although he may waive the tort and recover the proceeds in an action of assumpsit,⁴⁴ one holding a valid mortgage on personal property may maintain an action of trover for the conversion of the property against a subsequent encumbrancer,⁴⁵ provided the first mortgagee has become entitled to possession by default or other condition broken;⁴⁶ So a junior mortgagee who seizes and sells the mortgaged property may be sued by the holder of the first mortgage for a conversion of the property,⁴⁷ and no demand is necessary,⁴⁸ and the holder of the first mortgage cannot be compelled to pursue the property by foreclosure.⁴⁹ Plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title and must not only show that the mortgage was executed, but that it was properly recorded.⁵⁰ In an action against subsequent mortgagees with notice of plaintiff's prior mortgage, defendants can claim no greater rights than the mortgagor could assert in an action against him, as where the mortgagor could claim failure of consideration for the first mortgage only to the extent of supplies promised but not furnished.⁵¹ In an action for a conversion which is not established, plaintiff cannot recover the excess of the proceeds of sale of the mortgaged chattels over the debt secured by defendant's mortgage as money had and received.⁵²

A first mortgagee entitled to possession may maintain replevin against a second mortgagee⁵³ or his assigns,⁵⁴ and his right so to proceed under the mortgage is not waived by the fact that instead of instituting foreclosure proceedings on the mortgage he had previously sought to get his money from a third person who had promised to purchase the mortgage.⁵⁵ A first mortgagee cannot recover the property from the second mortgagee in replevin without first tendering him the amount of expenditures made by him for the preservation of the mortgaged property with the consent of the first mortgagee.⁵⁶

By virtue of his interest as mortgagee, a first mortgagee may maintain an action on the case as against a junior mortgagee having actual notice of the first mortgage, who wrongfully impairs his security.⁵⁷

In detinue the superior equity of a mere equitable mortgage will not prevail as against a subsequent mortgagee.⁵⁸

§ 249. — By Junior Mortgagee

A junior mortgagee with a superior right of possession may in a proper case maintain trover or replevin against a senior mortgagee.

A second mortgagee may maintain an action against the first mortgagee for the wrongful conversion of the property covered by both mortgages⁵⁹ after a tender of the payment of the senior mortgage,⁶⁰ and where he is entitled to possession he may bring replevin;⁶¹ but unless he shows a superior right to possession a second mortgagee cannot recover against the first mortgagee for a conversion,⁶² nor can he recover possession of the chattels.⁶³ Thus the second mortgagee cannot maintain replevin against a first mortgagee in possession unless the mortgage has been satisfied,⁶⁴ or unless the first mortgagee is exercising an unlawful or unauthorized control over the property;⁶⁵ nor may a subsequent mortgagee recover damages from a prior mortgagee unless it appears that the value of the property at the time of conversion exceeded the amount of the prior mortgagee's claim.⁶⁶ Where the first mortgage is regarded as conveying the legal title, it is held that a second mortgagee acquires a mere lien which will not support either trover⁶⁷ or detinue⁶⁸ against the first mortgagee and those holding under him. Furthermore, a second mortgagee, not being vested with legal title, cannot maintain an action predicated on such title against the first mortgagee, although the first mortgagee remains in possession after the satisfaction of his mortgage.⁶⁹ The holder of a second lien on property who claims damages through the act of a prior chattel mortgagee cannot recover if his lien is also secured by other property of sufficient value to pay it.⁷⁰

§ 250. — Accounting

A mortgagee may be compelled to account to other mortgagees for moneys derived from his possession of the mortgaged chattels.

The others may compel an accounting in equity if one of several mortgagees takes possession of the mortgaged property and derives a profit from its use,⁷¹ or fraudulently sells the property and refuses to apply the proceeds of the sale to the satisfaction of the mortgage liens;⁷² provided there is no adequate remedy at law;⁷³ and the substitution of a receiver for defendant senior mortgagee does not alter or diminish plaintiff's cause of action.⁷⁴

§ 251. Pleading

The rules of pleading applicable in civil actions of the same form generally, control actions between mortgagees.

In actions between mortgagees for conversion⁷⁵ or in replevin⁷⁶ plaintiff's pleadings must allege the facts constituting his cause of action. So, in replevin by a junior against a senior mortgagee whose mortgage is invalid against third persons, plaintiff must aver a compliance with the recording acts,⁷⁷ and if his petition shows that his debt has matured, he must positively aver a compliance with statutory requirements as to renewal of the mortgage.⁷⁸ When a first mortgagee sues a second mortgagee who has sold the property under his mortgage, the complaint must allege a right to possession⁷⁹ or a demand for possession,⁸⁰ but where the right to possession is alleged and the conversion has actually occurred it is held unnecessary to allege and prove a demand upon defendant and its refusal to deliver the chattels.⁸¹

81. Or.—Eade v. First Nat. Bank, 242 P. 333, 117 Or. 47, 43 A.L.R. 374.

Defendant who, in an action by the prior mortgagee, relies upon an equitable defense must allege all facts necessary to establish it.⁸² An answer alleging failure of plaintiff claiming under a crop mortgage to furnish the mortgagor with sufficient supplies to cultivate the crop does not show a total failure of consideration.⁸³ Although a statute provides that the lien of a crop mortgage shall attach only to crops next maturing after the execution thereof, in an action by a mortgagee of realty for conversion of a crop sold on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage thereon, the answer is not demurrable for failure to allege that the crop sold was the one next maturing after the execution of the mortgage, nor is the answer defective because not stating the mortgage was filed of record and the time and place thereof where plaintiff was accurately informed thereof by reference to an attached exhibit.⁸⁴

Issues, proof, and variance. In replevin by a second chattel mortgagee against one claiming under a prior mortgage the question of failure of consideration of the second mortgage as between plaintiff and the mortgagor is immaterial.⁸⁵ In replevin by the first mortgagee against the second mortgagee who has foreclosed his mortgage, the latter may avail himself of the defense that after-acquired goods were not covered by the first mortgage, under a general denial, and need not plead it affirmatively, but the prior mortgagee cannot assert an estoppel on the part of the junior mortgagee unless he pleads it.⁸⁶ A second mortgagee who relies on the release of the first mortgage to give him priority must plead such release.⁸⁷

General rules of civil actions as to the burden of proof, and as to the admissibility, and weight and sufficiency of evidence apply.

In actions between mortgagees the burden of proof is on the party having the affirmative of the issue.⁸⁸ Thus, the burden is on plaintiff to establish all facts necessary to constitute a cause of action,⁸⁹ including his title,⁹⁰ and the fact that the chattels claimed are the identical ones described in his mortgage;⁹¹ and the burden is on the holder of a second lien who claims damages through the act of a prior chattel mortgagee, whereby the lien was lost, to prove that other property by which his lien is also secured is inadequate.⁹² When plaintiff discharges his preliminary burden and establishes a prima facie case, the burden shifts to the opposite party to establish his defense.⁹³ Thus, in detinue the burden is on him to prove the bona fides of his title.⁹⁴

Under the principles applicable to civil actions generally, the evidence in an action between mortgagees must be relevant and material,⁹⁵ but subject to this rule evidence is admissible to establish the identity of the chattels claimed,⁹⁶ ownership,⁹⁷ invalidity of defendant's mortgage,⁹⁸ defendant's effort to spoliage evidence of plaintiff's title,⁹⁹ or notice.¹ In an action between mortgagees, it was held error to exclude a mortgage containing a clause allowing the mortgagee to take possession at any time;² and in an action by the mortgagee of realty for conversion of grain sold by the sheriff on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, notices of the sheriff's sale under the chattel mortgage and foreclosure and the sheriff's certificate of report of sale are properly admitted.³

ance of the proof,⁴ and general rules as to weight and sufficiency of the evidence apply.⁵

§ 253. Trial and Judgment

In an action between mortgagees, general rules as to instructions, questions of law and fact, verdict, and judgment apply.

In accordance with the general rules applicable in the trial of a civil case generally, in actions between mortgagees for conversion the court should correctly instruct the jury as to the law applicable to the case, granting proper requested instructions where their submission is justified by the evidence.⁶ Where there is conflicting evidence, the court should submit to the jury questions of fact.⁷ Accordingly, in an action for conversion it is for the jury to determine questions relating to payment,⁸ priority of the mortgages,⁹ or whether a mortgagee accepted a new mortgage thereby extinguishing a prior mortgage;¹⁰ and in an action for replevin, priority of the mortgages,¹¹ or what constitutes a reasonable time for calves to follow their mothers and remain covered by the mortgage lien,¹² are likewise jury questions. Questions relating to a contention that defendants were fraudulently endeavoring to absorb more property than was necessary to the payment of their prior claim may be determined in replevin.¹³ A verdict is properly directed in an action of replevin where the facts are undisputed or there is no substantial conflict in the evidence,¹⁴ but a verdict should not be directed for one mortgagee where there is ample evidence to support a verdict for the other either in a possessory action¹⁵ or in an action for damages;¹⁶ and it is error to direct a verdict for defendant in an action by a second mortgagee against a first mortgagee for the conversion by the latter of property covered by both mortgages, where it appears that the value of the property converted exceeds the amount due on the first mortgage lien.¹⁷ Where the only issue in a mortgagee's replevin action against a subsequent mortgagee, was the right to possession and damages for detention, and the court directed a verdict for the transferee of defendant's mortgage, who intervened, the court should have directed a verdict for defendant.¹⁸

The sufficiency of the verdict and judgment is governed by the general rules applicable to the particular form of action resorted to.¹⁹ In an action in replevin by the senior mortgagee, plaintiff's judgment may be for the value of the chattel in lieu of delivery;²⁰ and the junior mortgagee who wrongfully detained property found to be of value sufficient to pay off both mortgages is not entitled to a money judgment against plaintiff for his lien, without first tendering to plaintiff the amount of the prior lien.²¹

§ 254. Damages and Amount of Recovery

The damages are measured by the successful party's interest in and the value of the mortgaged chattel.

In an action between mortgagees, plaintiff's recovery is limited to the amount of his interest in the property or to the amount of his debt with interest not exceeding the value of the property,²² with attorney's fees when provided for in the mortgage or note secured thereby.²³ So, where the senior mortgagee without foreclosure sells the property at private sale and is sued by the junior mortgagee for conversion, if the value of the property sold is less than the amount secured by defendant's mortgage and the sale is not fraudulent, the junior mortgagee can recover no damages.²⁴ Where a mortgagee suing a prior mortgagee for conversion has other security he is, as shown supra § 249, entitled to recover at all only in the event that his remaining security is insufficient to pay the debt secured; and then his recovery is limited to so much of the excess in value of the property converted over the amount due on the prior mortgage as, with the remaining security, would be sufficient to pay the amount due him.²⁵

Under the statutes relating to replevin in some jurisdictions the first mortgagee may, when the property has been in the possession of the second mortgagee but is not in his possession at the time of suit, recover the value of the property.²⁶ Where the second mortgagee is in possession under his mortgage, the first mortgagee is not entitled to damages in replevin for the unlawful detention of the property unless a demand has been made before suit.²⁷ The damages to which the senior mortgagee

Conformity to proof

Awarding judgment to chattel mortgagee suing in replevin is not erroneous because there was no proof of value of goods contained in writ of replevin where mortgagee was at least entitled to nominal damages.—Bloch v. Egert, 172 A. 523, 12 N.J.Misc. 445.

11 C.J. p 622 note 92.

Full amount due

Where the value of the chattel was in excess of the amount due under the first mortgage, the measure of damages as against a subsequent mortgagee who converted the mortgaged property, is the full amount due under the first mortgage, including interest and attorney fees.—Hopkins v. Anderson, 21 P.2d 560, 218 Cal. 62.

As governed by mortgagor's interest

Under a mortgage covering all of the mortgagor's undivided interest in the chattel, the value of the mortgagor's interest at the time of the conversion by a subsequent mortgagee is the mortgagee's measure of damages.—Mahoney v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Salmon, 271 P. 935, 47 Idaho 24.

Impairment of security

First mortgagee, in action on case as against junior mortgagee having actual notice of first mortgage, who wrongfully impairs security, may recover to extent that security has been diminished, damages within value of mortgaged property and not in excess of debt secured.—People's Bank of Richland v. Farmers' State Bank, 122 S.E. 636, 32 Ga.App. 42.

Liability of senior mortgagee

"Where two mortgages are of equal dignity covering the same property in favor of different mortgagees, senior mortgagee is liable to junior mortgagee for conversion of property to extent of its market or intrinsic value at time of conversion."—Holmes v. Klein, Tex.Civ.App., 84 S.W.2d 521, error dismissed.

Amount of attorney's fee

In action for conversion, plaintiff was entitled to what would have been reasonable attorney's fee for foreclosure of mortgage if property had not been converted and mortgage had been foreclosed.—Nichols v. Jackson County Bank, 298 P. 908, 136 Or. 302.

is entitled for detention is the legal interest on the value of the goods from the time of taking until the trial, and not the value of the use during such time.²⁸ In replevin by a subsequent mortgagee in good faith against a prior mortgagee who failed timely to file a renewal affidavit as required by law, defendant is not entitled to assert a prior claim on the chattel for warehousemen's charges he paid with the expectation of being reimbursed by the mortgagor.²⁹ In replevin by a first mortgagee against a second mortgagee who had replevined the mortgaged property from the mortgagor, all damages sustained by defendant because plaintiff took back property covered by the mortgage can be determined, but defendant whose mortgage covered only one chattel cannot complain that plaintiff whose mortgage covered that chattel and another one took back the latter without selling it under the mortgage, nor can defendant question the sufficiency of the consideration allowed for the chattel taken back and credited upon the mortgage.³⁰

Recoupment in action by junior mortgagee. Where the junior mortgagee of chattels sues the senior mortgagee for a conversion thereof, the senior mortgagee may recoup the value of his special interest in the property.³¹

K. INJUNCTIONS

§ 255. In General

Injunction will not issue as of right where there are other adequate remedies.

An injunction will not issue as a matter of right where it is not necessary to protect the rights of the interested parties, and where other proceedings already accepted by the parties afford a complete remedy.³² Thus, while a judgment creditor of a chattel mortgagor with lien perfected on the mortgaged chattel may invoke the jurisdiction of equity to determine the validity of the chattel mortgage, where the judgment creditor has elected to sell the chattel in disregard of the mortgage and has bought it in, such equitable jurisdiction cannot be invoked to restrain the mortgagee's action of replevin without any showing that the law court will not be able to determine fully the rights of the parties.³³

§ 256. Suit by Mortgagor

In absence of other adequate remedy, improper interference with the mortgagor's rights may be enjoined.

The mortgagor may resort to equity to enjoin an improper interference on the part of the mortgagee with the property mortgaged in derogation of the mortgagor's rights, wherever there is no adequate remedy at law.³⁴

§ 257. Suit by Mortgagee

A chattel mortgagee may in a proper case restrain the mortgagor, or purchasers from, or creditors of, the mortgagor, from interfering with his rights in the mortgaged chattel.

To prevent interference with or destruction of the property by the mortgagor, the mortgagee may maintain a bill in equity for an injunction and receiver, although the time for payment set out in the mortgage has not arrived,³⁵ and, where the mortgagee has legal title and the right of immediate possession, he may by injunction restrain the mortgagor from selling the chattels and placing them beyond the reach of the mortgagee or the control of the court.³⁶ The mortgagee has this remedy also against purchasers with notice and without consideration.³⁷ If the mortgagor is allowed to "conduct its ordinary business" in disposing of the mortgaged chattels, the mortgagee cannot enjoin a removal of the goods from the state.³⁸ The mortgagee of chattels may enjoin a sale of the mortgaged property by attaching creditors of the mortgagor if such sale endangers his rights.³⁹

X. REMOVAL OR TRANSFER OF PROPERTY BY MORTGAGOR

§ 258. Right of Mortgagor to Remove

Frequently under the statutes and the usual terms of mortgages, the mortgagor is not permitted permanently to remove mortgaged chattels without the mortgagee's consent.

Ordinarily, under the statutes and usual terms of such mortgages, a chattel mortgagor is not permitted permanently to remove the mortgaged property beyond the limits of the state where the mortgage is made,⁴⁰ and, as shown infra § 279, it is frequently made a criminal offense for him to do so, although such removal is usually permissible if he gives ample security to protect the rights of the mortgagee,⁴¹ or if the mortgagee expressly or impliedly consents thereto.⁴² Of course, a prohibition in the mortgage against a removal of the property may be waived by the mortgagee's consent thereto,⁴³ although it may be that such consent must be supported by a sufficient consideration.⁴⁴ Where the mortgagee gives his consent to such removal, compliance with the terms thereof is essential, and an agreement that the mortgaged property may be removed to a particular state will not authorize its removal to a different one.⁴⁵ Even though there is an express provision in the mortgage prohibiting the removal of mortgaged property to another locality, where the mortgage is on such property as a wagon or motor vehicle, in view of the nature of the property, a temporary removal of the property for ordinary purposes is permissible.⁴⁶

A removal of the property from the situs of the mortgage will not affect the validity of the mortgage as between the parties, although the mortgagee's consent or acquiescence in a removal may render the mortgage subordinate to subsequent bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers.

A mere change in the locality of a mortgaged chattel will not displace or affect the lien as between the parties to the mortgage.⁴⁷ In the absence of a statute or stipulation to the contrary, an unauthorized removal at most only subjects the property to foreclosure,⁴⁸ and a removal does not render the mortgagor guilty of a conversion if there is no intent to place the property beyond the mortgagee's reach,⁴⁹ as where the removal is for the purpose of saving the property from injury.⁵⁰ On the other hand, it has been held that, as to subsequent bona fide⁵¹ purchasers or encumbrancers, if the mortgagee consents to a removal by the mortgagor, or ratifies an unauthorized removal,⁵² the mortgage lien is thereby waived or extinguished.⁵³

"Not only does a removal of mortgaged property beyond the limits of the state impair the mortgagee's rights, but it is against the policy of the law. . . . Furthermore, if it should become necessary for the mortgagee to resort to the remedies provided by law for the enforcement of his rights, they would be impaired by reason of the necessity of resorting to another jurisdiction."—Hill v. § 260. Right of Mortgagor to Sell or Convey

In the absence of a statute or stipulation to the contrary, a mortgagor, acting in recognition of the mortgage, may sell his interest in the mortgaged chattels.

A mortgagor has the right, of course, to sell the mortgaged property with the mortgagee's consent.⁵⁴ In the absence of a statute or stipulation to the contrary, a mortgagor rightfully in possession may, before a default has occurred in the condition of the mortgage, sell,⁵⁵ give,⁵⁶ or mortgage⁵⁷ the encumbered property, but, as hereinafter considered in § 263, the purchaser with notice, actual or constructive, of the mortgage takes subject to its lien. The sale must be in recognition of, and not in antagonism to, the mortgage.⁵⁸

Even after a default or condition broken, a mortgagor may sell whatever interest he has in the property.⁵⁹ This vendible interest may be only an equity of redemption,⁶⁰ or it may be the legal title where, under the statute, title to mortgaged chattels does not pass until a foreclosure has been completed.⁶¹ A sale of the property by either party to the mortgage with full consent of the other conveys the legal title to the purchaser.⁶²

Effect of penal statute. A statute which makes it criminal in a mortgagor to sell the property while the mortgage remains in force and unsatisfied without the written consent of the mortgagee, but which does not punish the purchaser, does not prevent title from passing to the purchaser subject to the mortgage lien when such a sale is made, if the purchaser does not know that the mortgage was unsatisfied or that the mortgagee had not given his consent to the sale.⁶³ A statute prohibiting the sale of mortgaged property without the mortgagee's consent does not prevent the mortgagor from contracting for a sale in the future, when such contract is made in recognition of the mortgage and provides for the payment or satisfaction thereof.⁶⁴

Assignability of right to sell. The right sometimes reserved to a mortgagor to retain possession of the mortgaged property and to dispose of it in the course of trade is not assignable.⁶⁵

§ 261. Liabilities of Mortgagor on Transfer of Property

A mortgagor making or aiding in an absolute sale of mortgaged property without the mortgagee's consent is liable for conversion; but he is only liable as surety for the mortgage debt where, with the mortgagee's consent, he sells to a purchaser who assumes the debt.

A mortgagor in possession of mortgaged property is liable for conversion if he, or his agent, makes an absolute sale of the property without the mortgagee's consent and in derogation of his rights,⁶⁶ or if he aids in, or benefits by, such a sale.⁶⁷ However, the mortgagor is not liable for conversion if the mortgagee consents to the sale,⁶⁸ unless the consent is given on a condition which is violated.⁶⁹

A mortgagor is liable to a purchaser for the amount of the mortgage debt if the property is taken from the purchaser under foreclosure sale and the proceeds applied in payment of the debt.⁷⁰

Where purchaser assumes mortgage debt. After a sale of mortgaged property by a mortgagor to a purchaser who assumes the mortgage debt, as between the buyer and seller the mortgagor becomes liable on the debt as surety;⁷¹ and as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, the mortgagor becomes liable as a surety if the mortgagee consents to,⁷² or ratifies,⁷³ the transaction.

- a. In general
- b. Sufficiency of consent, ratification, and estoppel

Liability of parties other than mortgagor for conversion see infra § 264.

Effect of penal statute

A mortgagee's right to maintain trover against the mortgagor will not be precluded because of the fact that he has a remedy by a prosecution of the mortgagor.—Drew v. Drew, 33 A. 1063, 68 Vt. 70.

Joint action

Assignee of mortgagee

Where a mortgagor sells with the consent of the mortgagee, and without notice that the mortgage has been assigned, neither he nor one who receives the proceeds of the sale from him is liable to the assignee of the mortgage for conversion.—Farmer v. Graettinger Bank, 107 N.W. 170, 130 Iowa 469.

Liability as principal continues unless the mortgagee's consent is shown.—Reed v. Shaw, Tex.Civ.App., 274 S.W. 274.

Consent to cancel mortgage

Where a mortgagee consents to cancel the mortgage on the purchaser's execution of a new one and in reliance on this agreement the mortgagor consents to the removal of the property, the mortgagee is estopped from holding the mortgagor liable for the debt on the purchaser's failure to execute the new mortgage.—Antigo Bank v. Ryan, 80 N.W. 440, 105 Wis. 37.

Discharge

The mortgagor will be discharged from all liability if the mortgagee does not refrain from any act which will impair the security.

consent has been given.⁷⁶ Knowledge on the part of the mortgagee that a particular sale has taken place is unnecessary, if he gave the mortgagor general authority to sell.⁷⁷ Consent to a sale, however, does not constitute a waiver of the lien where the mortgagee positively refuses to release the mortgage,⁷⁸ or where the sale is subject to the mortgage which the purchaser assumes.⁷⁹

Conditional or qualified consent. The mortgagee's consent to a sale of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor may be conditional;⁸⁰ and when such a consent is given, the condition must be performed in order to render the consent a waiver of the mortgage lien as between the parties, or as against a purchaser who was a party to the condition or had knowledge thereof,⁸¹ as where consent is given on condition that the proceeds of the sale be applied on the mortgage debt,⁸² or that the mortgage debt should first be paid.⁸³ On the other hand, nonperformance of a condition imposed on a mortgagor will not affect the rights of a purchaser⁸⁴ or third

11 C.J. p 625 note 47.

Effect of recording

The fact that a mortgage, containperson⁸⁵ who does not participate therein, or have knowledge thereof, as an agreement to allow a mortgagor to sell and turn over the proceeds is a substitution of his personal obligation for the mortgage security.⁸⁶

Duty to give consent. In the absence of a binding contract, the mortgagee is not bound to consent to the sale of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor to a third person,⁸⁷ unless the goods are perishable.⁸⁸

Effect of sale on intermediate liens. In those jurisdictions in which the legal title to the mortgaged property remains in the mortgagor, a sale by the mortgagor with the consent of the first mortgagee, but without notice to intermediate lienholders, does not foreclose their liens, although made for full value, and the proceeds are applied to the payment of the debt secured by the first mortgage;⁸⁹ but the contrary has been held in those jurisdictions in which the effect of the mortgage is to vest title in the mortgagee.⁹⁰ An agreement that the mortgagor may sell a part of the property and, with the proceeds, purchase other property of like kind, to be secured by the mortgage in lieu of that sold, is not void as to a junior mortgage, when the senior mortgagee has no actual knowledge of the existence of the junior mortgage,⁹¹ and a junior lienor cannot complain of a sale with such consent when it is made in good faith in open market.⁹² Of course, if the junior lienor is a party to the consent to sell the first mortgagee does not waive his lien as to him.⁹³

Revocation of authority. Authority to sell may be revoked at any time before a valid sale is made,⁹⁴ but not after the rights of a purchaser or encumbrancer have become fixed.⁹⁵

b. Sufficiency of Consent, Ratification, and Estoppel

Consent or authority given to the mortgagor to sell the property may be oral or in writing, and its sufficiency depends on the intention of the parties, unless the circumstances are such as to imply consent. A mortgagee may lose his lien by ratifying an unauthorized sale or by conduct estopping him from denying the mortgagor's authority to make the sale.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁹⁶ the mortgagee's consent to a sale of the mortgaged ing a provision against sale or removal of the mortgaged property without the mortgagee's written consent, is recorded does not indicate that prospective purchasers have notice of a conditional consent to sell.—Oklahoma Cattle Loan Co. v. Wright, 268 S.W. 712, 219 Mo.App. 157.

Duty not condition

on the mortgagor's promise to pay the debt, the promise constitutes a duty but it does not constitute a condition to the mortgagor's power to convey an unencumbered title.—General Credit Corporation v. Rohde, 187 A. 676, 122 Conn. 100.

"The mortgagor and the first mortgagee may fairly and in good faith agree that the property be sold on the regular market without foreclosure and the proceeds applied on the indebtedness; and subsequent lienholders have no ground for complaint, in the absence of fraud, or misconduct amounting to legal fraud, which results in prejudice to their rights. If, in order to accomplish such lawful purpose, it becomes necessary to remove the property, in good faith, from the county, failure to wait upon mortgagees or lienholders, subsequent to the first mortgage, in order to obtain their consent thereto, would not render the mortgagor guilty of a crime within the letter or the spirit of the statute. It is well known that a private sale of chattels, made in good faith and on the open market, is likely to bring more than a forced sale; that, in such circumstances, lienholders subsequent to the first mortgage cannot complain, when, notwithstanding the more advantageous sale, the proceeds are inadequate to extinguish the lien of the first mortgage, is as good sense as if it is sound law."—*State v. property may be given orally,⁹⁷ although the mortgage forbids sales without written consent,⁹⁸ and notwithstanding that a sale without such written consent, is, by statute, made an offense.⁹⁹

In the absence of circumstances implying consent, or working a ratification or estoppel, whether the mortgagee authorized the mortgagor to sell mortgaged property depends on the intention of the parties,¹ and the mortgagor may not go beyond the terms of a specific authorization.² If the authority to sell involves the exercise of discretion, it cannot be delegated by the mortgagor.³

(5) A mortgagee's direction to the mortgagor to house and prepare for market an ungathered crop.—Etheridge v. Hilliard, 6 S.E. 571, 100 N.C. 250.

Circumstances held not to imply consent

(1) The fact that a mortgagee of wheat did not look after the wheat when it was threshed, or have anyone there to take it away, or send any team for it.—Barnesville First Nat. Bank v. St. Anthony, etc., El. Co., 114 N.W. 265, 103 Minn. 82.

(2) A statement by the mortgagee after sale.—McLeod Lumber Co. v. Neighbors, 114 So. 176, 22 Ala.App. 204.

(3) That mortgagee of cattle notified mortgagor that he would discontinue advancements for running cattle, and that mortgagor must make other arrangements.—Byers Bros. & Co. Live Stock Commission Corporation v. McKenzie, 239 P. 525, 30 N.M. 487.

(4) Letter from mortgagee indicating that he hoped the mortgagor got a good price for the property, and requesting information as to when the mortgagor expected to sell.—First Nat. Bank v. American State Bank of Brighton, 215 P. 473, 73 Colo. 254.

implication may arise from a general course of dealing between the parties,⁶ from the terms of the mortgage itself,⁷ or from the fact that the mortgagee allows the mortgagor to assume the credit of ownership of the property.⁸ While consent of the mortgagee cannot be implied from equivocal conduct,⁹ it may be implied from the fact that he remains silent in the presence of an actual sale,¹⁰ or knowingly acquiesces in a sale.¹¹ A mortgagee's mere expectation that the mortgagor will sell the property and pay the proceeds to him and has been held to imply a consent,¹² although there is contrary authority.¹³

If a mortgage by its terms prohibits a sale without the mortgagee's written consent, there is authority that a further provision permitting the mortgagor to retain possession does not imply authority to sell;¹⁴ but it has been held that a provision prohibiting a sale may be waived by the mortgagee's conduct in knowingly permitting its violation.¹⁵

In case of mortgaged stock of goods. In the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, consent to sell mortgaged property consisting of a stock of goods is implied from the fact that the mortgagor is permitted by a provision in the mortgage to remain in possession of the property,¹⁶ or from the

Permitting other sales

(1) Consent to a particular sale may be implied from the permission of previous sales over a considerable length of time.

(2) Separate written consents to the sale of parts of mortgaged chattels indicates an intention not to give consent beyond each specific authorization.—Mitchell v. Mason, 44 S.W.2d 672, 184 Ark. 1000.

(3) Consent to sales under previous mortgages does not imply consent under a later mortgage containing a provision against sale except on written consent.—Imperial Valley Savings Bank v. Huff, 190 S.W. 116, 126 Ark. 281.

(4) Mere negative habitual conduct on previous occasions in making no objections to mortgagor's sales raises no inference of assent to a particular sale.—Hattermer v. Davis, 91 So. 321, 206 Ala. 613.

(5) Persons who have not previously dealt with the mortgagor have no right to rely on his previous course of selling mortgaged property.—Conway Compress Co. v. Adkisson, 69 S.W.2d 1079, 189 Ark. 20.

Facts held irrelevant

That chattel mortgagor applied proceeds of mortgaged property on mortgage debt, and that mortgagee never acquiesced in mortgagor's misappropriation of proceeds of mortgaged property.—Moffett Bros. & Andrews Commission Co. v. Kent, Mo., 5 S.W.2d 395.

Replenishment of, or additions to, stock

(1) A provision authorizing the mortgagor to continue the business and "replenish" the stock from time to time impliedly authorizes a sale.—Bynum v. Miller, 89 N.C. 393.

(2) A mortgagee's conduct in permitting the daily sale of a consumable stock of goods and the replenishment thereof raises a presumption of waiver.—Ogden v. Stewart, 29 Ill. 122.

(3) But a mortgage contemplating additions to the stock of goods on hand at the date of the mortgage has been held not to authorize the mortgagor to sell.—St. Louis Drug Co. v. Robinson, 81 Mo. 18.

Cut cord wood is not a stock of goods or property, the possession and use of which in the ordinary course of business means the daily sale thereof, and so such a provision in a mortgage thereon does not imply authority to sell.—Meyer v. Munro, 71 P. 969, 9 Idaho 46.

fact that the mortgagee accepted a mortgage on such property and permitted the mortgagor to remain in possession thereof with knowledge that it would be exposed and offered for sale by the mortgagor in the ordinary course of trade.¹⁷

Ratification or estoppel after sale. A mortgagee's lien may be extinguished by his ratification of an unauthorized sale.¹⁸ A subsequent assent to a sale,¹⁹ or the taking of a new mortgage on property received by the mortgagor in exchange for the original mortgaged property after acquiring knowledge of the exchange,²⁰ may constitute a ratification of the mortgagor's sale; but a ratification will not necessarily be inferred from a mortgagee's equivocal acts or statements made after acquiring knowledge of a disposition of the property.²¹ A mortgagee is not bound on the theory of ratification of an unauthorized act of an agent, where the mortgagor, in selling the property, acts in his own right as owner.²²

A mortgagee may by his conduct be estopped from asserting his lien against a purchaser of the property from the mortgagor,²³ but the elements of an estoppel will not ordinarily be present if the 23. N.M.—Shepherd v. Van Doren, 60 P.2d 635, 40 N.M. 380.

Destroying purpose of recording act

A mortgagee will be estopped from asserting his lien if he performs some act which aids in destroying the intended purpose of a registration or recording act. Accordingly, where automobile sold under duly filed mortgage came into mortgagee's possession, and mortgagee discovered that engine number had been changed but redelivered automobile to mortgagor without restoring original number, the mortgagee was estopped to assert lien against subsequent good-faith purchaser.—Shepherd v. Van Doren, supra.

Estoppel of mortgagee

Mortgagee of chattels in leased café, who, on C, mortgagor and lessee, selling the business and chattels, signed a guaranty attached to the act of sale that the title to the property was unencumbered and free from any claims by C's creditors, was estopped to assert lien of the mortgage as against the lessors who, relying on the guaranty, accepted surrender of C's lease, with its superior lien, and gave to the purchasers a new lease under which lessors had an inferior lien.—Youree v. Limerick, 101 So. 864, 157 La. 39, 37 A.L.R. 394.

No estoppel

(1) A mortgagee's agreement to postpone his lien in favor of a subsequent mortgage does not estop him from suing a purchaser for conversion.—Swift Gin Co. v. Robinson, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 333, error dismissed.

(2) Where a mortgagor sold a mortgaged mule, the mortgagee, by filing a claim against the mortgagor's estate, was not estopped to proceed against the purchaser of the mule for a balance remaining.—Bank of Norris v. Pates & Allen Co., 94 S. E. 881, 108 S.C. 361.

mortgagee has no knowledge of the fact that there has been a sale.²⁴ If the mortgagor is not the mortgagee's agent for the sale, the mortgagee will not be estopped to assert his rights against a purchaser by any act of the mortgagor, unless the mortgagee has knowledge of the mortgagor's intention and the purchaser relies thereon in ignorance of the truth, and a mortgagee is not estopped to assert his rights against the purchaser where the latter has not paid the purchase money and so is not damaged.²⁵ Further, a mortgagee is not estopped to assert his rights against a purchaser who does not rely on the mortgagor's act in ignorance of his lack of authority,²⁶ and as against a purchaser with actual knowledge of the existence of a mortgage there can be no estoppel short of a binding contract.²⁷

Silence or acquiescence. While a ratification may not necessarily be inferred from a mortgagee's mere silence after learning that the mortgaged property has been disposed of,²⁸ if the mortgagee knowingly acquiesces in a sale and depends on the mortgagor for an accounting, he is estopped from asserting his lien.²⁹ A delay in asserting his claim may estop the mortgagee from denying the mortgagor's authority to sell,³⁰ and a prompt repudiation of the mortgagor's right to sell may be shown to disprove such acquiescence as might be construed into a ratification of the sale³¹ or exchange³² of the mortgaged property. An assignee of notes secured by a recorded mortgage is not negligent in permitting the property to remain in the possession of one who, he knew, had purchased it from the mortgagor so as to prevent him from recovering for conversion.³³

Receipt or acceptance of proceeds of sale. A mortgagee's acceptance of all or part of the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property, with knowledge of their source, results in a ratification of the sale,³⁴ or operates to estop the mortgagee from claiming the property³⁵ or asserting his lien³⁶ against the purchaser. Also, the fact that the mortgagor, after receiving the proceeds, informs the mortgagee that he is using them in his business, and the mortgagee does not repudiate the mortgagor's act in so doing, is corroborative of the contention that the sale was authorized.³⁷ If, however, the mortgagee, without knowledge of a sale, receives a portion of the proceeds, his retention of the same after acquiring such knowledge is not a ratification of the sale;³⁸ and where the mortgagor, with the proceeds of an unauthorized sale, pays to the mortgagee, who has no knowledge as to the source of the money, a debt other than the one secured, failure to refund the money on learning the source from which it was derived is not

By accepting part of the proceeds of a sale and thereby ratifying it, a mortgagee cannot recover the balance of the purchase price from the buyer.—Parker v. Harrell, 124 S.E. 575, 188 N.C. 337.

Satisfaction pro tanto

In a conversion action against a purchaser who intermingled mortgaged corn with his own, a subsequent receipt of proceeds by the mortgagee ought not to be construed as a ratification of the sale, but rather as a satisfaction of the claims pro tanto against the debtor and the purchaser who converted the corn.—Sloan State Bank v. a ratification of the sale.³⁹ The acceptance of the proceeds of a sale of a portion of the property covered by a duly recorded mortgage does not constitute an estoppel to deny the validity of a subsequent sale of the remainder of the mortgaged property.⁴⁰

c. Consideration

Consideration for a consent to sell mortgaged property is unnecessary unless the consent is in the form of a release.

At least where the purchaser had no actual knowledge of the mortgage, a purchaser from a mortgagor may take title to the property free of the mortgage lien without there being any consideration for the mortgagee's consent to sell, if such consent is based on an estoppel,⁴¹ or a waiver operating as an estoppel,⁴² rather than on the theory of a release.⁴³ An approval or confirmation of a sale made after the transaction and without consideration has been held ineffective to relieve the property of the mortgage⁴⁴ if it is a declaration in the form of a release rather than an estoppel.⁴⁵

Where consideration is necessary, it has been held that a mortgagor's promise to the mortgagee that he will pay him from the proceeds of the sale of the property is sufficient consideration for his consent to sell, irrespective of whether or not the mortgagor actually fulfills his promise.⁴⁶

§ 263. Rights and Liabilities of Purchaser in General

In the absence of circumstances cutting off the rights of the mortgagee, a purchaser of mortgaged property from the mortgagor acquires only the rights of the mortgagor. In a proper case, a purchaser of mortgaged property may be liable for its value, the mortgage debt, or the value of the use of the property.

In the absence of special circumstances cutting off the rights of the mortgagee,⁴⁷ a purchaser of mortgaged property from the mortgagor acquires the rights of the mortgagor, but no greater rights,⁴⁸ and takes title subject to the lien of the mort-

Subject to mortgage

A purchaser of mortgaged property, sold "subject to the mortgage," takes no greater rights than the mortgagor had.

Void sale

Mortgagee's rights under unrecorded mortgage are good against a purchaser from the mortgagor where the sale was made in disregard of a statute governing the sale and transfer of automobiles, which statute also provides that all sales which do not conform thereto are void.—Hammond Motor Co. v. Warren, Kan., 213 P. 810.

Primary liability

As between mortgagors and their assignee buying mortgaged property for value, primary liability rests with mortgagors.—Sabine Motor Co. v. W. C. English Auto Co., Tex.Com. App., 291 S.W. 1088, reversing, Civ. App., 283 S.W. 224.

Statute determining rights of creditors

A statute providing that, if any person transact business in his own name, all property acquired or used in the business shall, as to creditors, be liable for his debts, cannot be extended to purchasers, and hence is not determinative of the rights of a purchaser of mortgaged property from a dealer.—Boice v. Finance & Guaranty Corporation, 102 S.E. 591, 127 Va. 563, 10 A.L.R. 654.

Rights of assignee under a deed of assignment are inferior to the rights of a mortgagee who takes possession of the mortgaged property prior to the filing of the deed.—Minnick v. Dettelbach, 17 Ohio Cir. Ct., N.S., 271.

Purchaser with notice

A purchaser with actual or constructive notice of the mortgage who buys the entire property from a mortgagor in rightful possession before default acquires only the interest of the mortgagor.—Wichita Mill & Elevator Co. v. Farmers' State Bank of Tipton, 226 P. 870, 102 Okl. 83.

Innocent purchaser defined

An "innocent purchaser" is one who pays or obligates himself to pay the full purchase price of mortgaged property to the vendor, with no notice of any claim or right to the property in another.—National Bank of Gallatin Valley v. Ingie, 164 P. 535, 53 Mont. 414.

gage,⁴⁹ except in so far as greater rights are conferred by reason of the failure of the mortgagee to take possession⁵⁰ or to record his mortgage, considered supra §§ 142-143. The fact that the mortgagee has other security sufficient to pay the debt does not give the purchaser any greater rights.⁵¹ The purchaser, however, has the legal title to the property and is entitled to possession until the right is cut off, either by judicial foreclosure or by sale in accordance with the terms of the mortgage.⁵² A mortgagee, bringing replevin for the property against attaching creditors, is not bound to protect the interests of an assignee of the mortgagor, although he has notice of the assignment.⁵³

Acceleration clause on disposal. A provision in a mortgage that if the property is disposed of the debt becomes immediately due and the mortgagee may enforce his lien, does not invalidate the sale of the mortgagor's interest to the purchaser, but gives immediate right of possession to the mortgagee and postpones the rights of the purchaser until the former's lien is satisfied.⁵⁴

Consent to sale. In jurisdictions where the law forbids a sale of mortgaged chattels without the consent of the mortgagee, a purchaser participating in the wrongful act of the mortgagor is not a holder as of right.⁵⁵ The mortgagee's consent to a sale will not render him liable to the purchaser for breach of the mortgagor's contract of sale,⁵⁶ or prevent the mortgagee from setting up against the purchaser a title acquired under an assignment of a prior mortgage.⁵⁷ Where, however, such consent is given, the rights of the purchaser are not affected by the execution of a renewal mortgage.⁵⁸ It has been held that, where the mortgagor is authorized by the mortgagee to sell, he acts as agent for the latter and can bind him by his warranties,⁵⁹ but a contrary conclusion has been reached in a jurisdiction where a mortgage does not pass title to the mortgagee, but is merely a lien on the property.⁶⁰ If the mortgagee consents to a sale of a part of the property but without waiving his lien, the purchaser may require the mortgagee to first exhaust

Mortgage covering particular automobile in the stock of an automobile dealer, and giving no permission to the dealer to sell the automobile, is not a mortgage on a shifting stock of goods, within the rule that a purchaser of goods subject to such mortgage acquires title free from the mortgage.—Hardin v. State Bank of Seattle, 205 P. 382, 119 Wash. 169.

Good title as against others

Under sale contract with purchase-money mortgage back, subsequent purchaser had good title as against every one but original buyer, it not appearing how seller to subsequent purchaser obtained title from original buyer, in absence of default.—Edson & Co. v. Hudson Motor Car Co., 228 N.Y.S. 582, 132 Misc. 223.

Exercise of option to foreclose

A purchaser charged with notice of a recital in the mortgage authorizing the mortgagee to declare the note due and to foreclose when he felt unsafe cannot complain of an exercise of such option by the mortgagee.—Warren v. Osborne, Tex.Civ. App., 97 S.W. 851.

Subsequent sale by mortgagor

the lien on the unsold portion before having recourse to the property sold, and if that is sufficient to satisfy the debt, the purchaser becomes the absolute owner of the property free from the mortgage lien.⁶¹

Defective or invalid mortgage. If a mortgage is void because not properly executed,⁶² or because the mortgagor has had no title,⁶³ it may be attacked by a purchaser of the property from the mortgagor. On the other hand, a purchaser of mortgaged property who purchases subject to the mortgage,⁶⁴ or who, at the time of purchase, recognized the validity of the mortgage and took into consideration the indebtedness secured thereby in determining the purchase price,⁶⁵ may not deny the validity of the mortgage. Although it has been held that the invalidity of the mortgage because of fraud in its execution is available to the purchaser,⁶⁶ and that a ratification of the mortgage by the mortgagor after the purchaser had acquired his rights could not affect his rights,⁶⁷ it has also been held that any rights of a mortgagor because of having been induced by fraud to execute the mortgage do not pass to the purchaser,⁶⁸ and that where the instrument was fraudulently made and the mortgagor was in no position to attack it, a purchaser of the property from him is, likewise, in no position to take advantage of the fraud.⁶⁹ It has also been held that the purchaser at a sale of mortgaged property may assert the invalidity, as against creditors, of a senior mortgage, although the auctioneer in making the sale announced that it would be made subject to the senior mortgage.⁷⁰

Encumbrances subsequent to mortgage. A purchaser of property who buys subject to a mortgage and other encumbrances, is not subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee as against the subsequent encumbrancers by paying the mortgage, even though there is an express agreement to that effect.⁷¹

Mortgage covering after-acquired property. While a mortgage covering after-acquired property is valid, as against a subsequent purchaser from the mortgagor with notice, to bind property acquired by the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage,⁷² it does not cover property subsequently acquired by the purchaser, although he purchases subject to the mortgage, unless he also assumes the covenants contained in the mortgage or the debt which it was given to secure,⁷³ or, although he does not directly assume the mortgage debt, unless the purchaser enters into a collateral agreement with the mortgagee which in effect amounts to such assumption.⁷⁴

Mortgage securing future advances. As a general rule, where a mortgage is given to secure future advances, advances made subsequent to a sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee having notice of the sale, will be postponed to the rights of the purchaser, but advances made after such sale, by virtue of the liability incurred prior to the sale, or notice thereof, are protected.⁷⁵

Liability of purchaser. In jurisdictions where the mortgagee has legal title to the property mortgaged a purchaser or assignee of chattels wrongfully sold or assigned by the mortgagor is liable to the mortgagee for their value.⁷⁶ A statute impos-

Liability of purchaser in conversion see infra § 264 b.

Swap or exchange provision

A provision in mortgage allowing mortgagors to swap or exchange mortgaged property, the property secured in exchange to stand in place of exchanged property, does not render mortgage void as to purchasers of the property not bona fide purchasers, so as to relieve them of liability for the value of the prop-

ing liability for the mortgage debt on a person purchasing property from a nonresident of the parish without first obtaining an affidavit from the seller that there is no mortgage on the property must be strictly construed and is inapplicable to a mortgage contracted in a foreign jurisdiction.⁷⁷ A purchaser failing to comply with such a statute cannot escape liability on the ground that the seller claimed to be a resident and that he so believed him to be,⁷⁸ and notwithstanding the fact that the mortgage had been executed under an assumed name.⁷⁹

The purchaser is not liable to the mortgagor for the purchase price of the chattels sold without the mortgagee's consent, when the property is returned after the sale,⁸⁰ or where the mortgage is subsequently foreclosed and the original purchaser buys it in at the foreclosure sale, although he will be liable for the use and hire of the chattels between the dates of the two sales,⁸¹ nor is he liable where the sale is made without the written consent of the mortgagee in violation of statute.⁸² A purchaser of mortgaged property who has not paid the mortgagor the purchase price may be required to pay it to the mortgagee in an action by the mortgagee against the purchaser and the mortgagor.⁸³

Where the mortgagor transfers the possession of the property to a third person, by sale or otherwise, that person, after demand made on him by the mortgagee entitled to possession, will thereafter be liable for the use and hire of the mortgaged property.⁸⁴

Other liabilities of purchasers of mortgaged property are discussed in sections immediately following.

§ 264. Liability for Conversion

- a. In general
- b. Purchaser

a. In General

Any person participating in an absolute sale of mortgaged property, or doing any act with respect thereto in defiance of the mortgagee's or rightful owner's rights, is liable for conversion.

Any person who participates in an absolute sale of mortgaged property to the exclusion of the mortgagee's rights,⁸⁵ or who is guilty of exercising an act, with respect to mortgaged property transferred by the mortgagor, which is in defiance of the mortgagee's rights,⁸⁶ is liable for conversion.

Receipt of proceeds of unauthorized sale

(1) A third person's mere act of receiving the proceeds of an unauthorized sale of mortgaged property is not a conversion by him.—Iowa Farm Credits Co. v. People's Sav. Bank of Menlo, 192 N.W. 139, 196 Iowa 967.

(2) The party receiving such funds must have knowledge of their origin.—Talmage-Sayer Co. of Joliet v. Smith, 7 P.2d 536, 91 Mont. 289.

(3) There is no liability for receiving such proceeds if the mortgagee waived its right thereto.—Evans-Snyder-Buel Co. v. Atchison County Bank, 76 Mo.App. 449.

(4) A junior mortgagee who aids and participates in an unauthorized sale with notice of the mortgage and receives and appropriates to his own use the proceeds thereof is liable in conversion.—Oats v. Dublin Nat. Bank, 90 S.W.2d 824, 127 Tex. 2, reversing Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Dublin Nat. Bank, Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 567.

Person acquiring no interest in property

Where a conversion of a mortgaged chattel is caused by a purchase thereof, one who merely loaned the money to effect it, acquiring no interest therein, is not liable.—Argo v. Sylacauga Mercantile Co., 68 So. 534, 12 Ala.App. 442.

86. Okl.—Bridges v. Union Cattle Loan Co., 229 P. 805, 104 Okl. 74.

Particular persons held liable

(1) A pledgee of mortgaged crops who resold them.—Equitable Loan Soc. v. Taylor Bros. Jewelry Co., Tex.Civ.App., 189 S.W. 516.

(2) A thresherman of mortgaged wheat, who sold it, and his purchaser.—Farmers' State Bank v. Peters, 22 P.2d 457, 137 Kan. 786.

(3) Elevator company paying money for mortgaged grain over to thresherman.—Great Falls Farm Machinery Co. v. Rocky Mountain Elevator Co., 22 P.2d 303, 94 Mont. 188.

(4) Vendor of land retaining a lien on half the crops as security for contract of sale, who terminates the contract and takes possession of the land and all of the crops, is liable for conversion to a mortgagee of that half of the crops which the vendor's lien did not cover.—Yakobian v. Johnson, 282 P. 522, 102 Cal.App. 10.

Unlawful removal

If one, having actual knowledge that another has a mortgage on personal property, willfully conveys the property beyond the limits of the state, and destroys the value of the mortgage, he is liable in damages to the mortgagee.—Franklin v. Howell, 133 S.E. 270, 35 Ga.App. 363.

Liability of mortgagor for conversion is considered in § 261 supra.

Agent. A person who acts as an agent of a mortgagor in wrongfully selling mortgaged property without the mortgagee's consent is liable for conversion to the same extent as the mortgagor for whom he acts, even though he may have no other notice of the mortgage than that given by record,⁸⁷ and irrespective of the fact that he acted innocently in making the sale.⁸⁸ To render an agent liable it is sufficient if he intermeddles with, or exercises any dominion over, the property, and it is not necessary that he have complete manual control thereof.⁸⁹

A servant of a purchaser who moves converted mortgaged property from the possession of the mortgagor to the purchaser in ignorance of the existence of the mortgage and of the terms of sale is not, it has been held, liable for conversion.⁹⁰

Bailee. The refusal of a bailee holding mortgaged property for the mortgagor to surrender it on a demand therefor by a mortgagee entitled to possession thereof may constitute a conversion by such bailee.⁹¹ However, a bailee receiving the property and returning it to the mortgagor before acquiring knowledge that the mortgagor's possession was wrongful is not a conversion by him.⁹²

Creditor. A creditor who instigates the mortgagor to sell mortgaged property and receives the proceeds,⁹³ or who, with notice of a crop mortgage, receives part of the crop in payment,⁹⁴ is liable to the mortgagee for conversion.

Mortgagee. Where under the recording act a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice obtains the property free from the mortgage lien, as already considered in § 142, he may sue the mortgagee for conversion for taking possession of the property and converting it, although no objection was made to the taking.⁹⁵

Where a sale of mortgaged property is absolute and unauthorized, the purchaser, if he had notice of the mortgagee's rights, is liable for conversion, and a demand and refusal is unnecessary; but, if he purchases without notice of the mortgagee's rights, or in recognition of the mortgage, unless he exercises dominion over the property inconsistent with the mortgagee's rights, he is not liable for conversion unless there is a demand for the property and a refusal.

One purchasing mortgaged property with notice of the mortgage and without the consent of the mortgagee is liable to the mortgagee for conversion, if the sale is an absolute one to the exclusion of, or if it is in derogation of, the rights of the mortgagee;⁹⁶ and the exercise of dominion by the

Sale by commission merchants outside state

(1) A commission merchant selling mortgaged property outside the state has been held liable for a conversion without any notice.—First Nat. Bank v. Siman, S.D., 275 N.W. 347.

(2) Other authority holds such a person liable on the theory of constructive notice given by the recording of the mortgage in the state where the property was originally located.—La Fayette County Bank v. Metcalf, 40 Mo.App. 494.

(3) Still other authority holds that actual notice of the mortgage is necessary in such a case.

Necessity of notice, actual or constructive

(1) Notice of the mortgage, either actual or constructive, is usually necessary in order to hold the purchaser liable for conversion.—National Bond & Inv. Co. v. Moss, 263 Ill.App. 187.

(2) In some jurisdictions, it seems that actual notice is necessary in order to hold the purchaser in conversion.

purchaser of property covered by a mortgage inconsistent with, and in defiance of, the rights of the mortgagee therein, constitutes a conversion.⁹⁷ Thus, a purchaser is liable for conversion if he disposes of the property,⁹⁸ resells⁹⁹ or removes it,¹ seizes or retains possession thereof,² destroys or materially alters its condition,³ fraudulently seizes it,⁴ mixes it with his own property so that it cannot be identified,⁵ or otherwise persists in denying the mortgagee's rights.⁶ Of course, if a purchaser's sale or removal of mortgaged chattels is prohibited by statute, he is liable for conversion.⁷

On the other hand, however, in view of the mortgagor's right to sell his interest in mortgaged property, as already discussed in § 260, a purchaser is not liable for conversion by his mere act of purchasing the property without doing anything inimical to the mortgagee's rights,⁸ particularly where the purchase was without notice of the mort-

Successive purchasers

If mortgaged property is wrongfully sold to a purchaser who resells to another who in turn sells the property again, all the purchasers are liable for conversion.—Union State Bank of Wapato v. Warner, 248 P. 394, 140 Wash. 220.

Violative of mortgage provisions

The rule is particularly applicable where the sale is in violation of the provisions of the mortgage.

Claiming as own

The purchase of mortgaged cattle by a third party and the claiming of them as his own, free from the mortgage, is a conversion thereof.—Barnett v. Wedgewood, 211 P. 601, 23 N.M. 312.

Payment of proceeds to mortgagor

In violation of a condition that they be paid to the mortgagee indicates such an absolute claim on, or dominion over, the property as will constitute conversion.—Rolette State Bank v. Minnecota Elevator Co., 195 N.W. 6, 50 N.D. 141.

Physical possession unnecessary

It is not essential to a conversion that the converter should take complete physical possession of the property, any intermeddling with, or dominion exercised over, the property of another being a conversion.—Argo v. Sylacauga Mercantile Co., 68 So. 534, 12 Ala.App. 442.

Appropriation to his own use of mortgaged property creates liability for conversion on the part of the purchaser, where the mortgagee, at the time, has a right of possession and the mortgage debt is unpaid.—U. S. Nat. Bank v. Great Western Sugar Co., 199 P. 245, 60 Mont. 342.

gagee's rights.⁹ Of course, the purchaser is not liable for conversion if the sale was made with the mortgagee's consent,¹⁰ unless consent was given on an unperformed condition of which the purchaser had notice.¹¹ A purchaser is not liable to a mortgagee if the mortgage is void,¹² or if the proceeds of the sale are turned over to, and accepted by, the mortgagee.¹³

Demand and refusal. Although a purchaser of mortgaged chattels may be liable for conversion where he refuses to deliver the property to the mortgagee on proper demand therefor,¹⁴ it has been held that, where a mortgagor entitled to possession until default sells the property, the failure of the purchaser to deliver the same on demand is not a conversion, where he has resold it and it has passed out of his control.¹⁵ It is unnecessary for a mortgagee to make a demand on the purchaser in order to hold him liable for a conversion, if the purchaser has exercised an act of dominion over the property inconsistent with the rights of the mortgagee,¹⁶

or after the law day of the mortgage,¹⁷ or if a demand for the property would be unavailing.¹⁸ On the other hand, a purchaser is not liable for conversion without a demand and refusal, if the sale itself does not constitute a conversion, and the purchaser is lawfully in possession of the property, and does no act which is inimical to the rights of the mortgagee.¹⁹

Provision for taking possession in case of sale. A purchaser of mortgaged property, with notice, may be liable for conversion if the sale is in violation of a provision in the mortgage to the effect that the mortgagee may take possession of the property in the event of a sale without his consent,²⁰ whether the sale is an absolute one,²¹ or a sale subject to the mortgage with the exercise of dominion over the property by the purchaser.²² It has been held, however, that if the sale is before default and the mortgagee has not exercised his option, the purchaser is not liable in conversion if the purchase is subject to the mortgage,²³ but he will be liable if the sale to him is an absolute one to the exclusion of the mortgagee's rights.²⁴

A junior mortgagee, if he has an actual financial interest in the property,²⁵ and did not consent to the sale, may recover in conversion from the purchaser of mortgaged property, if he purchased with knowledge of the mortgage and exercised dominion over the property inconsistent with the mortgagee's rights.²⁶ The application of the purchase money of mortgaged property toward payment of a prior lien will not relieve the purchaser from liability to the mortgagee for conversion, if the sale was made without authority from the holder of the prior lien.²⁷

Purchase from mortgagee in possession. In some jurisdictions it is held that a stipulation that the mortgagor shall retain possession of the property until breach of the condition precludes the mortgagee from suing in trover before default, and the purchaser cannot be held liable for conversion where he sells or disposes of the property purchased before such default,²⁸ although he may maintain a bill in equity to prevent a threatened removal of the property, or a special action on the case for the injury to his lien.²⁹ Retention of possession after the law day, however, will render the purchaser guilty of conversion.³⁰ On the other hand, according to other authority, such an agreement for possession in the mortgage will not avail a purchaser in an action for conversion, regardless of when the sale took place, as such a stipulation is considered personal to the mortgagor.³¹

§ 265. Assumption of Debt by, and Personal Liability of, Purchaser

A purchaser of mortgaged property, who assumes the mortgage indebtedness as a part of the consideration for the conveyance to him, becomes personally liable for the mortgage indebtedness.

The purchaser of mortgaged chattels who assumes the mortgage indebtedness as a part of the consideration for the conveyance to him becomes personally liable for such indebtedness,³² particularly where the mortgagee, on the faith of the purchaser's assumption of the debt, releases the mortgagor from personal liability.³³ The purchaser's personal liability, however, depends entirely on his express

Authorities of high character, including those cited by counsel for defendants, hold that, until such option is exercised by the mortgagee, and he either so takes or demands the possession, the possession remains with the mortgagor until default made in the payment of the debt, and that a sale made by him before such default or assertion of right will not support trover against the vendee or agent making the sale."—National Bank of Commerce v. Assumption of interest Assumption, by grantee of business, of a mortgage on the property conveyed, is an agreement to assume and pay interest as well as principal, notwithstanding that the amount of the principal alone is recited in the assumption clause.—Castelbaum v. Wolfson, 104 A. 84, 92 N.J.Law 165.

No recovery from mortgagor

A purchaser assuming the mortgage debt cannot recover from the mortgagor on account of a part payment made on the mortgage, in the absence of fraud, mistake, or agreement to that effect.—Stuckman v. Roose, 46 N.E. 680, 147 Ind. 402.

Seller executing note as agent

Where the seller had so executed a note and mortgage as to bind himself personally, although he signed as agent, the fact that title to the mortgaged property was in another will not defeat the mortgagee's right to recover at law on the purchaser's promise to pay the mortgage debt.—Pope v. Porter, C.C.Iowa, 33 F. 7.

Not agent of mortgagee

A purchaser assuming the debt cannot, in replevin brought in his own name against an officer levying on the property in suit against the mortgagor, recover on the ground that he is the agent of the mortgagees.—McNorton v. Akers, 24 Iowa 369.

Assumption of debt by purchaser as assumption of the mortgage debt, and the mere purchase of the property subject to a mortgage does not impose such liability on him.³⁴ The alleged promise by the purchaser to pay or assume the debt must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.³⁵ A purchaser of mortgaged chattels who assumes payment of the notes secured thereby is entitled to credit for payments made, whether he became paymaster of the notes or not.³⁶

Consideration. A sufficient consideration for a purchaser's promise to assume the mortgage debt may be found in a mortgagee's promise to forbear foreclosure proceedings,³⁷ or in his act of consenting to the sale which results in his losing his mortgage lien.³⁸

Rescission or cancellation. An agreement between a buyer and seller of mortgaged property, whereby the buyer assumes the payment of the mortgage, may not be rescinded by their mutual consent.³⁹ However, it has been held that personal liability for the assumption of the mortgage does not attach to the purchaser in an executory contract of sale before title has passed, and in such a case the contract may be canceled and the purchaser will be free of liability.⁴⁰

Right to attack mortgage. A purchaser of mortgaged property who assumes the mortgage debt is estopped from attacking the validity of the mortgage for any defect in its execution,⁴¹ or for failure to record.⁴²

§ 266. Right to Proceeds of Property

- a. Sale with mortgagee's consent
- b. Sale without mortgagee's consent
- c. Application of proceeds to debt

a. Sale with Mortgagee's Consent

- (1) In general
- (2) Conditional consent
- (3) Sale by mortgagor as agent

(1) In General

As a general rule the lien of a mortgage does not attach to the proceeds of a sale by the mortgagor where the mortgagee consented to the sale.

It is a general rule that the lien of a mortgage does not attach to the proceeds received from a transfer of mortgaged property by the mortgagor where the mortgagee consented to⁴³ or ratidischarge of mortgage lien see infra § 346.

No estoppel

Conduct of purchasers of mortgaged chattels in junking chattels because obsolete and in replacing junked chattels by modern equipment did not estop them from denying assumption of mortgage indebtedness.—Treuer v. Holtzman, 262 N.W. 369, 272 Mich. 344.

Subject to mortgage

(1) An assignee of a contract for the purchase of property is not liable for the indebtedness of the assignor for the purchase price, where the assignment was made subject to such indebtedness; but the property may, in such a case, be subjected to an existing lien.—Burkhart v. Brownfield, Tex.Civ.App., 33 S.W. 2d 885.

(2) Where the property is publicly sold with the express announcement that it is sold subject to a mortgage, the conditions of which are to be binding on the purchaser, one hearing the announcement and purchasing cannot be held personally liable for the mortgage debt.—Hamill v. advantage of by a purchaser who assumes the mortgage and takes possession of the property.—Hartford-Connecticut Trust Co. v. Puritan Laundry of Hartford, 111 A. 149, 95 Conn. 172.

fixed⁴⁴ sale, except as between original parties to the loan,⁴⁵ or one standing in no better position than the mortgagor.⁴⁶ Of course, the mortgagee is not liable to other creditors of the mortgagor where the proceeds of the sale are applied in payment of the mortgage debt before anyone else acquired a lien thereon.⁴⁷ In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that where a mortgagor sells mortgaged property and receives the proceeds thereof, the proceeds stand in place of the thing sold, and the lien attaches to the proceeds as trust funds;⁴⁸ and it has been held that the lien of a mortgage on a growing crop follows the grain after severance, and the proceeds after a sale thereof.⁴⁹ Also, in some jurisdictions, the right to the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged property depends on whether the person claiming such funds had notice of the origin of the funds, and, if he had such knowledge, his equities are inferior to those of the mortgagee.⁵⁰

Where a mortgage is given on book accounts due the mortgagor, the mortgagee has no lien on the money collected thereon by a purchaser of the business, if it was mixed with other money and used in the regular course of business, but the mortgagee may claim from the assets of the purchaser moneys collected on such accounts as for money received for his use.⁵¹

(2) Conditional Consent

Generally a mortgagee is entitled to the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged property made upon the condition that the proceeds be paid to him, although he may not be entitled to them as against a third person receiving them from the mortgagor without notice of the mortgagee's rights.

A mortgagee is entitled to the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor when the sale is made upon the condition, agreement, or understanding that the proceeds shall be paid to the mortgagee or his representative.⁵² This right of

Depository bank

A depository bank, notifying depositor of a credit to his checking account, and charging account with past-due note, was not a creditor charged with notice of recorded mortgage. The bank's actual knowledge of the mortgage would not preclude it from charging its unsecured note against depositor's credit from sale of mortgaged cattle, without proof that it knew the origin of the funds deposited. Under such circumstances, the mortgagee, permitting a sale of mortgaged cattle without notifying depository of proceeds, substitutes promise of mortgagor for his lien, and cannot look to depository for protection.—Security State Bank of Melrose, Minn. v. First Nat. Bank, 254 P. 417, 78 Mont. 389.

Andrews, 235 N.W. 794, 204 Wis. 393.

Notice

Actual notice of the agreement that the mortgagee was to have the proceeds is unnecessary, as constructive notice of the mortgage, together with knowledge that the mortgagee's employees were clerking a public sale of the property, is sufficient to put a purchaser on inquiry as to the mortgagee's rights.—James River Bank v. Sale to junior mortgagee

Where a mortgagor executes a mortgage to a trustee for the benefit of two creditors, one of which is to have a superior claim on the proceeds, and sells the property in the usual course of trade under an arrangement with the senior creditor whereby he may sell the property and assign the purchasers' accounts to him, the senior creditor may recover the purchase price of a sale to the junior creditor made under the same arrangement.—Grumme v. Validity and effect of agreement

An agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the property may be sold at a public sale by the mortgagor, and the proceeds paid to the clerk of the sale to be applied in discharge of the mortgage, is valid and binding and the mortgagee has a right to the proceeds of the sale as against other creditors of the mortgagor.—Barrett v. Martzahn, 173 N.W. 72, 186 Iowa 548.

thority that he is not entitled to a lien or claim thereon as against a person receiving them without notice of their character as proceeds of a sale of mortgaged property;⁶⁰ but the mortgagee is entitled to the proceeds as against the mortgagor⁶¹ or a person receiving them from him with notice,⁶² or a person not having lawful claim thereto under or through the mortgagor.⁶³

(3) Sale by Mortgagor as Agent

A mortgagee has a lien on the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged property, where he permits the mortgagor to sell as his agent or in his name.

A mortgagee's lien on the proceeds of a sale by the mortgagor is not waived when the latter acts as agent for the mortgagee in making the sale and delivery;⁶⁴ and so the mortgagee has a superior claim to the proceeds as against the mortgagor,⁶⁵ his assignee of the proceeds with notice of the mortgagee's claims,⁶⁶ a garnishing judgment creditor,⁶⁷ or a purchaser.⁶⁸ The mere fact that the agent violates his instructions and sells the property as his own does not deprive the mortgagee of his right to the proceeds.⁶⁹ If a mortgagee permits a sale of the mortgaged property in his own name, the lien of the mortgage is transferred to the proceeds of the sale.⁷⁰

Where the mortgagee permitted the sale of, and aided the mortgagor in selling, part of the property sufficient to pay the mortgage debt, and in converting the proceeds to his own use, it was held that the mortgage was void as to a judgment creditor of the mortgagor, and the latter could subject to garnishment the proceeds of the remaining property in the hands of the mortgagee.⁷¹

A bank, in which a mortgagor has deposited the proceeds of a sale to his own credit, has no right to apply any of such funds in payment of the mortgagor's debt after receiving notice of such an agreement between the mortgagee and mortgagor, but is bound to pay them over to the mortgagee.—Auburn First Nat. Bank v. Eastern Trust, etc., Co., 79 A. 4, 108 Me. 79.

Proceeds in hands of subsequent purchaser

If the mortgagee consents to a sale under an agreement of which the purchaser has notice that the proceeds of the sale are to be paid to him, and that when so paid he will release the mortgage, the mortgagee, while he cannot recover the property on failure of the purchaser to pay over the purchase price, is entitled to the proceeds of a second sale by the assignee in insolvency of the original purchaser, or by one taking a mortgage from such purchaser prior to the sale by the assignee and while the first mortgage is of record.—Monson v. What constitutes sale as agent

Where crop of beets subject to mortgage was sold to a sugar company, under an understanding that the usual custom of the company as to issuing checks payable to all parties interested should be followed, it was not a sale by mortgagor with the consent of the mortgagee, but was equivalent to a sale by mortgagor as agent of the mortgagee.—Clatworthy v. Ferguson, 210 P. 693, 72 Colo. 259.

Deposit in mortgagor's name

Where the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged property held by the mortgagor as the mortgagee's agent belong in equity to the mortgagee, his right is not affected by a deposit of the money to the mortgagor's credit in a bank.—Thex v. Shreve, 267 P. 92, 38 Wyo. 285.

ceeds of an unauthorized sale of the mortgaged property, but the mortgagee may waive the tort and recover the proceeds of the sale from the mortgagor or a third person who had notice of the mortgage.

The lien of a mortgage is not transferred to the proceeds of an unauthorized sale of mortgaged property,⁷² at least as against a third person receiving them without notice of the mortgagee's rights,⁷³ although it has been held that, where mortgaged property is accepted by one who has notice of the mortgage, in part payment for other property, the substituted property is impressed with an equitable lien to the extent of the value of the property mortgaged,⁷⁴ and that, if the proceeds of an unauthorized sale are deposited in a bank pending determination as to priority of lien claimants, the bank is bound by the adjudication.⁷⁵

Where mortgaged property is sold without the mortgagee's consent, unless he has taken other inconsistent action,⁷⁶ the mortgagee is not limited to his remedy of retaking the property but may waive the tort and recover the proceeds of the sale,⁷⁷ and such recovery has been permitted against a third person receiving the proceeds with knowledge of the source of the funds.⁷⁸ Such recovery may be had in an action for accounting,⁷⁹ or for money had and received.⁸⁰

c. Application of Proceeds to Debt

In the absence of a waiver or estoppel, ordinarily the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged chattels should be applied in payment of the mortgage debt if it is a first lien thereon.

As a general rule, money received by the mortgagee from the sale of the mortgaged property must be applied by the mortgagee in payment of the mortgage debt,⁸¹ even though the mortgagor has not directed this to be done,⁸² unless the mortgagor

Where a chattel mortgagor sold the property, receiving a check payable to the mortgagee as his interest might appear, an agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee that the fund should be applied in discharge of the mortgage constituted an equitable assignment to the mortgagee, and the right to the fund passed to an assignee of the mortgagee as against an assignee of the mortgagor.—Slimmer v. State Bank of Halstad, 159 N.W. 795, 134 Minn. 349.

Indemnity mortgage

Where a chattel mortgage is given to indemnify the mortgagee against liability as surety for the mortgagor, in the absence of fraud, the mortgagee is entitled to hold the proceeds of the sale for his security, or until indemnified or relieved from liability.—Bean v. Parker, 96 A. 17, 89 Vt. 532.

Payment of real estate taxes

A mortgagee who held both a chattel and a real estate mortgage from the mortgagor cannot apply the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged chattels in payment of real estate taxes and assessments without the mortgagor's consent, notwithstanding a provision in the real estate mortgage accelerating the due date thereof upon a failure to pay taxes.—Reichenbach v. City Trust & Savings Bank of Boone, 218 N.W. 903, 205 Iowa 1009.

82. Nev.—Wheeler & Stoddard v. Portland Cattle Loan Co., 268 P. 46, 51 Nev. 53.

An unsecured creditor of the mortgagor may not complain of an application of the proceeds in pursuance of an agreement with the mortgagor, even though he has advanced credit without notice of the mortgage.—Hammill Co. v. Van Loon, 72 N.W. 520, 103 Iowa 249.

Subsequent promise to surety

A mortgagor's promise to turn over the proceeds of a sale to his consents to a different application thereof.⁸³

A mortgagee cannot complain of the application of the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged property in payment of prior liens, but he is entitled to the surplus, if any, after prior liens are discharged.⁸⁴ As against a second mortgagee, the law will apply the proceeds of a sale by the mortgagor with the first mortgagee's consent to the payment of the first mortgage;⁸⁵ in the event of a sale with the consent of a second mortgagee who receives the proceeds with knowledge of the prior mortgage, the proceeds will be held in trust by him for the benefit of the senior mortgagee.⁸⁶

The holder of a void mortgage has no lien on the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property and cannot complain of a judgment awarding the proceeds to another claimant, irrespective of the validity or invalidity of the latter's lien;⁸⁷ but it has been held that a mortgagee of a mortgage valid as between the parties but void as to creditors may retain the proceeds of a sale as against a judgment creditor who has failed to make a levy.⁸⁸

Sale by assignee, administrator, or receiver. A mortgagee has been held to be entitled to an equitable lien on the proceeds of property resulting from a sale by the mortgagor's assignee for the benefit of creditors,⁸⁹ an administrator of his estate,⁹⁰ or a receiver of the mortgaged property.⁹¹ If the mortgagee becomes a purchaser of the property at a receiver's sale, and pays the amount of his bid, he must assert his mortgage lien on the proceeds of the sale before the receiver has distributed them to junior lienors and has received his discharge, regardless of whether or not the receiver knew of the mortgage.⁹²

Waiver. A mortgagee may waive his right to the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged chattels in favor of inferior liens, and on such waiver, if the mortgagee receives such proceeds, it holds them as trustee for those having superior rights.⁹³ A mortgagee waives or loses his right to the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property by his act of turning them over to the mortgagor after having had possession,⁹⁴ or by treating such proceeds as the property of the mortgagor,⁹⁵ as against a third person securing a right thereto. Further, a mortgage holder waives his equitable claim to the proceeds of a sale by commencing an action on the mortgage notes and garnishing the proceeds while his action to establish his equitable claim is still pending.⁹⁶

§ 267. Actions by Mortgagee against Mortgagor

Unauthorized removals or sales of mortgaged property may be restrained by injunction. Actions by a mortgagee against the mortgagor are governed by the usual rules.

An attempt by a mortgagor to remove the mortgaged goods from the state may be restrained by injunction,⁹⁷ even before a breach of a condition of the mortgage,⁹⁸ unless the mortgagor intended only to make a temporary removal in the ordinary surety is not binding on a mortgagee to whom the mortgagor had previously transferred the mortgaged property as security for another debt.—Francis v. Central Nat. Bank of Waco, Tex.Civ.App., 268 S.W. 761.

Mortgagor's deposit in mortgagee bank

A mortgagee bank knowingly permitting its mortgagor depositor to deposit and check on the proceeds of a sale of the property thereby treats the fund as the latter's property and is precluded from claiming a superior right thereto as against a garnishing creditor; in such a case the bank could not necessarily be said to be a trustee of the funds.—*Turner v. use of the mortgaged property and to return the property before the maturity of the mortgage.⁹⁹ Likewise, a sale of the mortgaged property to the injury of the mortgagee may be restrained by injunction before¹ or after² a default in the mortgage.

As already stated in § 261, a mortgagee may maintain an action for conversion against a mortgagor who has sold the property without authority, and such actions are governed by the usual rules as to civil actions.³

§ 268. Actions by Mortgagee against Purchaser or Transferee

Actions by a mortgagee against the purchaser or transferee of mortgaged property are discussed in sections immediately following.

§ 269. — Right of Action

In a proper case the mortgagee may bring an action against the purchaser from the mortgagor to recover the property itself or its value.

In view of the rule discussed supra in § 264 b, that a purchaser exercising dominion over the mortgaged property inconsistent with the rights of the mortgagor is guilty of conversion, where such facts exist, the mortgagee may bring an action for conversion against the purchaser to recover the value of the mortgaged property.⁴ Before bringing the action, the mortgagee must have a property interest in the chattel, general or special,⁵ and he must be entitled to possession of the property.⁶ Accordingly, the holder of a mortgage should not commence his action until after the "law day" of the mortgage,⁷ or until there has been a default giving him the right to possession of the property.⁸

In view of the rule that a mortgagee who unconditionally consents to a sale of the property waives his lien, considered supra in § 262 a, a mortgagee cannot maintain an action for conversion against the purchaser if he has authorized the sale,⁹ unless he consented on a condition which was unperformed.¹⁰

In a proper case the mortgagee may bring an action for damages for injury to, or destruction of, the mortgage lien,¹¹ which may be an action

A statute declaring a mortgage to be void after it has been recorded a certain number of years does not bar an action brought after that time for the proceeds of a sale made, pursuant to an agreement, prior to the expiration of the period of limitation.—State ex rel Cantley v. Akin, 22 S.W.2d 836, 224 Mo.App. 114.

Parties

A bank in which the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged property is deposited pursuant to an agreement for the sale is not a necessary party in a mortgagee's action to recover such proceeds, particularly in the absence of any pleading of a nonjoinder of a party defendant.—*State ex rel Cantley v. Damages to reversionary interest

Where the purchaser takes possession of mortgaged chattels, the mortgagee may at once maintain an action for damages to his reversionary interest, even though not entitled to possession.—Reynolds v. Morton, 154 P. 325, 23 Wyo. 528.

on the case¹² or an action of assumpsit.¹³ In some jurisdictions, however, in which the lien theory prevails, it is held that the mortgagee cannot maintain an action of assumpsit against the purchaser of the property where the mortgage contains only the usual conditions.¹⁴ The mortgagee in a proper case may also recover the proceeds of a sale of the property in an action for money had and received¹⁵ or assumpsit.¹⁶ Where the circumstances are such as to raise an implied promise on the part of the purchaser to pay the mortgagee the reasonable market value of the property, the mortgagee may recover it in a suit for account.¹⁷

Junior mortgagee. The holder of a mortgage junior to another lien may, if he has the right of immediate possession of the property as against anyone but the first mortgagee and those claiming under him, maintain trover against a purchaser of the property from the mortgagor;¹⁸ but, in a jurisdiction which regards the whole legal title and right of possession as passing to the first mortgagee, it has been held that a second mortgagee has no such right of action.¹⁹ A junior mortgagee has no right to bring an action to recover the proceeds of a sale of the property by the mortgagor unless he shows that he has some interest therein.²⁰

Replevin. If a mortgagee has a right to the possession of the property, he may bring replevin to recover its possession from a purchaser or transferee of the mortgagor.²¹ He must recover on the strength of his own title²² or right of possession,²³ not on the purchaser's lack of right. A mortgagee who is entitled to possession need not make a demand for the property,²⁴ at least as against a purchaser with notice of the mortgagor's lack of authority to sell.²⁵ Of course, a mortgagee may not maintain replevin if he consented to the sale.²⁶

transferee from the mortgagor are such facts as negative the cause of action as stated by the mortgagee.

On the other hand, matters which do not defeat the cause of action stated by the mortgagee cannot be set up by the purchaser in an action for conversion²⁹ or replevin.³⁰

§ 271. — Parties

In a mortgagee's action against a purchaser of mortgaged property, the mortgagor is a proper, but not a necessary, party defendant.

In a suit by the mortgagee against a purchaser of mortgaged property, for conversion, the mortgagor,³¹ and a successive purchaser,³² are proper parties defendant; but the mortgagor is not a necessary party, either in such an action³³ or in a claim and delivery action by a mortgagee against a warehouseman.³⁴ A warehouseman, with whom mortgaged grain is stored, is a proper party to an action for conversion against a transferee of the negotiable warehouse receipt for the grain.³⁵

As a plaintiff in an action for conversion, a mortgagee who has pledged the mortgage and received a reassignment thereof from the pledgee prior to commencing the action is the real party in interest.³⁶

§ 272. — Pleading

- a. In general
- b. Issues, proof, and variance

a. In General

The plaintiff's petition, declaration, or complaint must state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action. The defendant must plead affirmative defenses if he wishes to rely thereon.

In accordance with general rules, plaintiff, in his initial pleading in an action against a purchaser of mortgaged property, must allege facts which state a cause of action;³⁷ and a statement in compliance with a code form may be sufficient.³⁸ If plaintiff's mortgage lien depends on some condition or act to be performed by the mortgagor, the performance thereof must be alleged.³⁹ A pleading is not bad because of a failure to allege that the mortgage sued on was registered or recorded,⁴⁰ or to allege a material fact which is shown by a copy of the mortgage attached to the pleading,⁴¹ or because it contains surplusage.⁴²

Although unnecessary in an action for money had and received,⁴³ in an action for conversion of mortgaged property, it is essential for plaintiff to allege that he has the ownership or legal title and right to possession of the property,⁴⁴ or that he has a special ownership or property therein.⁴⁵ Ownership of the indebtedness evidenced by the note and mortgage must be alleged in an action for conversion⁴⁶ and in replevin.⁴⁷ There should also be an allegation as to the place of conversion,⁴⁸ and a statement of the value of the property converted or the damage sustained.⁴⁹ However, there is authority holding that the value of the property and the amount of the mortgage debt need not be alleged, as they are matters of proof, not pleading.⁵⁰ It is unnecessary to allege that the purchaser is guilty of fraud or bad faith,⁵¹ that all recourse against the mortgagor has been exhausted,⁵² or that the mortgagor is insolvent.⁵³ If the act of conversion took place after a default in the mortgage, a demand and refusal need not be alleged.⁵⁴

The declaration in an action on the case should have an allegation that plaintiff's security was injured.⁵⁵

Foreign mortgage. A mere general allegation that the execution of a mortgage in another state was in accordance with the laws of that state is sufficient, in the absence of a demurrer or motion for a more specific statement.⁵⁶

Defendant must plead an affirmative defense in order to rely on it,⁵⁷ and the facts relied on as a defense should be stated directly and positively and not hypothetically or by way of recital.⁵⁸

Amendment of pleadings. Plaintiff may, in a proper case, amend his pleadings to conform to the proofs.⁵⁹

b. Issues, Proof, and Variance

In actions of this character, the parties are confined to the theory of the case made and the issues raised by their pleadings.

The parties, in an action by a mortgagee against a purchaser, are confined to the theory of the case made by their pleadings.⁶⁰ Proof may be made of any matter in issue,⁶¹ and all material issues in his pleading must be proved by plaintiff in order to warrant a recovery.⁶² A general denial puts in issue all the allegations in plaintiff's pleading that are necessary to constitute a cause of action, and under it defendant may introduce any competent evidence tending to negative those allegations.⁶³ The party having the affirmative of an issue should prove it as alleged,⁶⁴ but proof need not be made of admitted matters,⁶⁵ or matters not within the issues.⁶⁶ An immaterial variance between the pleadings and proof is not fatal.⁶⁷

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The burden of proof is on the party having the affirmative of the issue. The usual presumptions arising in civil actions arise in actions of this character.

In an action by a mortgagee against a purchaser from the mortgagor, the burden of proof is on the party who holds the affirmative of the issue.⁶⁸ Accordingly, the burden rests on plaintiff to make out his case,⁶⁹ and on defendant to prove affirmative matters of defense raised by him,⁷⁰ although on the making of a prima facie case the burden of going forward with the evidence may be shifted to the other party.⁷¹

While it has been held that a mortgagee suing for a wrongful conversion of the property has the burden of showing a purchase without his consent,⁷² there is authority holding that the burden is on defendant to prove that the purchase was with consent,⁷³ at least where the mortgage contains a provision prohibiting a sale without the mortgagee's consent,⁷⁴ or where defendant raises the issue of a consent as a defense.⁷⁵ It has been both held⁷⁶ and denied⁷⁷ that plaintiff has the burden of proving notice of his mortgage.

Presumptions. The usual presumptions are indulged in in actions of this character.⁷⁸

b. Admissibility

Competent evidence which is relevant and material to the issues is admissible.

72. Ind.—Conwell v. Jeger, 51 N.E. 733, 21 Ind.App. 110.

In Texas

(1) The burden of proof is on plaintiff to prove a sale without his consent and it is unnecessary for defendant to plead a waiver, as there is no conversion established unless the sale is wrongful and without plaintiff's consent.—Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Dublin Nat. Bank, Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 567, 571, reversed on other grounds Oats v. Dublin Nat. Bank, 90 S.W.2d 824, 127 Tex. 2, quoting Corpus Juris—Ewing & Phillips Hardware Co. v. Cage-Sparks Hardware Co., Civ.App., 297 S.W. 568.

(2) But there is earlier authority that where a mortgagee has proved the existence of a lien, its registration, and a conversion of the property, the burden of proving the waiver of the lien was on the purchaser.—Weeks v. First State Bank of De Kalb, Civ.App., 207 S.W. 973.

73. Minn.—James v. Pettis, 159 N.W. 953, 134 Minn. 438.

There is no presumption that a sale is made with plaintiff's consent.—James v. Pettis, 159 N.W. 953, 134 Minn. 438.

75. Colo.—Longmont Farmers' Milling & Elevator Co. v. Mulvaney, 205 P. 525, 71 Colo. 215.

Mortgagor's authority to sell as agent

A purchaser seeking to prove that his possession is rightful by showing that he purchased the property from the mortgagor who was acting as agent of mortgagee, has the burden of showing that mortgagor had such power and that it was strictly followed.

Ala.—Burks v. Hubbard, 69 Ala. 379. Colo.—Ilfeld v. Ziegler, 91 P. 825, 40 Colo. 401.

78. Sale or consumption

In the case of a mortgagor's unauthorized sale of mortgaged property purchased for sale on the market, a sale or consumption of the property by the purchaser will be presumed within a reasonable time. There is no such presumption of sale where cotton was sold by the mortgagor only two weeks before the law day of the mortgage.—Albertville Trading Co. v. Critcher, 112 So. 907, 216 Ala. 252.

Presumptions arising from possession and ownership of negotiable instruments are not conclusive where there is evidence tending to overcome them.—Berry v. Adams, Mo. App., 71 S.W.2d 126.

Place of payment

On the issue as to place of payment of a mortgage, it has been held to be presumed that it is payable at the residence, office, or place of business of the mortgagee, where the residence of the mortgagor and mortgagee is in the same county.—Garner v. Arizona Egyptian Cotton Co., 197 P. 231, 22 Ariz. 318.

79. Ala.—Gay & Bruce v. W. B. Smith & Sons, 114 So. 468, 217 Ala. 33—Albertville Trading Co. v. Critcher, 112 So. 907, 216 Ala. 252—Gay & Bruce v. Citizens' Nat. Covington County Bank, 87 So. 406, 17 Ala.App. 556, certiorari denied Ex parte Sansom, 87 So. 408, 205 Ala. 54.

In an action by a chattel mortgagee against a purchaser of the mortgaged property, competent evidence that is relevant or material to any of the matters in issue and not too remote therefrom is admissible,⁷⁹ but immaterial, irrelevant, or remote evidence must be excluded.⁸⁰

c. Weight and Sufficiency

Although indirect or circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to establish matters to be proved on issues such as fraud or a mortgagee's waiver of his lien, evidence on an issue such as a mortgagee's oral consent to sell must be clear and unequivocal.

While indirect or circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to prove such matters as fraud in a sale of mortgaged property,⁸¹ or to show the mortga-

Prima facie evidence of debt

A note and mortgage duly executed, acknowledged, and recorded, so as to make the same self-proving, is prima facie evidence of the existence of the debt when produced by the creditor, and, in an action to recover the property from a third person, that the debt thereby secured is unpaid.—Wilson v. Windham, 90 So. 791, 206 Ala. 427.

Presumptive evidence

Evidence that mortgage had not been released was presumptive evidence only that mortgage note and mortgage were still subsisting obligations.—Berry v. Adams, Mo.App., 71 S.W.2d 126.

§ 275. — Damages

tion for the value of mortgaged property is generally the value of the property or the amount of the balance due on the mortgage, whichever is the lesser amount, including interest on the debt; but there should be deducted from the amount allowable sums applied in payment of the debt or a superior lien. Damages for a wrongful detention, or for depreciation may be recovered in an action for possession.

In an action to recover damages or the value of mortgaged property from a purchaser thereof, as where the purchaser is guilty of a conversion of the property, the amount recoverable is generally either the value of the property up to the amount due under the mortgage, or the balance due to the extent of the value of the property, according to which is the lesser sum.⁶ The value of the property has been measured by its market value⁷ at the time of its conversion,⁸ or the time of sale,⁹ and, in case

Value of property as including parts thereof

A judgment for the value of a part of converted property is erroneous, where recovery for that part was included in the value of the property as a whole.—Brooks Supply Co. v. First State Bank of Electra, Tex. Civ.App., 292 S.W. 631.

Successive purchasers

Where the chattels are sold to various purchasers, each one is liable to the mortgagee for the full value of the property purchased by him up to the point when the mortgage debt is satisfied, but equity will enforce contribution between them.—Hughes v. Graves, 1 Litt., Ky., 317.

Remittitur for excess of a fluctuation in value, the highest value between the time of conversion and trial has been allowed in the discretion of the jury.¹⁰ The interest due on the mortgage¹¹ from the time of a purchaser's resale of the property,¹² or from the maturity of the debt,¹³ may be included in the damages. Recovery for reasonable expenditures incurred by the mortgagee in pursuing the property has also been allowed.¹⁴ However, the amount recoverable by a mortgagee is limited to the amount of his interest in the mortgage instrument.¹⁵ There should be deducted from the damages allowed the value of any property,¹⁶ or the amount of any sums,¹⁷ received by the mortgagee for application on the debt; but the expense of picking or threshing a mortgaged crop may not be deducted if the lien for the labor is inferior to the mortgage lien.¹⁸

In an action to recover possession of mortgaged property, the mortgagee may include damages for a wrongful detention of the property;¹⁹ also, an amount for any depreciation²⁰ or deterioration²¹ of the property.

Attorney's fees. While a purchaser may be liable for attorney's fees stipulated for in the notes secured by the mortgage in an action on the notes,²² an allowance therefor where the suit is not on the note has been held to be improper.²³

Nominal damages. If the mortgagee has sustained no actual damages, only nominal damages will be awarded.²⁴

Exemplary damages. In an action against a purchaser for the possession of the mortgaged chattel, or for the value thereof, plaintiff is not entitled to exemplary damages.²⁵

Damages recoverable by holder of junior mortgage. The holder of a second mortgage is entitled to recover only the value of his interest in the mortgaged property,²⁶ and the value of such interest is necessarily reduced if the security is inadequate to respond to both liens to the extent of the deficiency;²⁷ if the first mortgage is less than the value of the property, the second mortgagee may recover the value less the amount of the first mortgage.²⁸ As in the case of an action by a first mortgagee, a purchaser is entitled to credit for any sums received by the second mortgagee in payment of his debt, and, on the other hand, the second mortgagee is entitled to add interest to the amount due him.²⁹

§ 276. Actions by Purchaser or Transferee

A purchaser of mortgaged chattels in suing third persons for their conversion cannot recover for the loss suffered by the mortgagee, but is limited in his recovery to the loss he has actually suffered.

A purchaser of goods mortgaged in excess of their value to a mortgagee who at the time of their conversion by a third person had filed suit for foreclosure is, in an action against such third person for conversion, limited in his recovery to the value of the use and possession of the property during the time he was wrongfully deprived of it, and it is error to refuse to hear proof as to the existence of the mortgage lien and the rights of all the parties.³⁰ A purchaser assuming the debt cannot, in replevin brought in his own name against an officer levying on the property in a suit by creditors against the mortgagor, recover on the ground that he is the agent of the mortgagees.³¹

A purchaser of mortgaged chattels may recover for their conversion by the mortgagee, subject to any right the mortgagee may have to offset the amount of the mortgage debt. In such actions the general rules governing actions generally will apply as to the pleadings, evidence and trial thereof, and the damages to be awarded.

A purchaser of mortgaged chattels may recover from a mortgagee for his conversion thereof,³² but the mortgagee can offset the amount due under the mortgage, if uncollected,³³ which amount the purchaser may recover over against the mortgagor from whom he purchased, after having made said mortgagor a party to the suit.³⁴ Also, on the foreclosure by a senior mortgagee of mortgaged chattels in the possession of a purchaser thereof, the purchaser is entitled to recover in a cross action against a junior mortgagee the purchase price he paid to such junior mortgagee with the mortgagor's consent.³⁵ It is not necessary that the purchaser, or the assignee of the mortgagor, in order to maintain an action for conversion of the mortgaged chattels by the mortgagee, prove demand and refusal, if there was otherwise a conversion,³⁶ or tender to the mortgagee the amount of the mortgage indebtedness;³⁷ nor, where he has taken legal title and his title and right to possession have never been divested, is he required to tender the amount of the mortgage debt as a condition to the assertion of his title against the mortgagee;³⁸ but, where the purchaser was not in possession at the time the property was taken by the legal representative of the mortgagee, he cannot recover possession without paying or tendering payment of the secured debt.³⁹

In actions by the purchaser against the mortgagee to recover possession of the property or for damages for a wrongful taking thereof, the rules governing civil actions generally will apply as to pleading,⁴⁰ evidence,⁴¹ and instructions to the jury.⁴² No presumption exists that a mortgagor owns the property covered by his mortgage, as between a party to the mortgage and a stranger,⁴³ but under the presumption that all persons are presumed innocent of crime and that the law has been obeyed it will, in a claim and delivery action by a remote assignee of the mortgagor to recover mortgaged chattels withheld by the mortgagee, be presumed, in the absence of all evidence on the subject, that the mortgagor in making the original transfer complied with a statute requiring him to notify the mortgagee of the intended sale, and making a sale without such notice larceny.⁴⁴

Matters of law should not be submitted to the jury,⁴⁵ but questions of fact, such as the identity of the property purchased with that covered by the mortgage, are for the jury to determine.⁴⁶

A purchaser of mortgaged chattels may recover from a mortgagee who converted them the value of the chattels at the time of their conversion,⁴⁷ together with damages for the unlawful detention from the date of the alleged conversion.⁴⁸

§ 278. — Against Mortgagor

A purchaser may bring an action against the mortgagor for inducing the sale by the fraudulent statement that the property was free from encumbrance. If he assumes the mortgage he cannot recover for payments made on the mortgage, nor acquire rights prior to those of the mortgagee by attachment in an action against the mortgagor.

The purchaser may, it seems, bring an action on the case for fraud against the mortgagor on the ground that the sale was induced by the mortgagor's fraudulent statement that the property was free from encumbrance.⁴⁹ However, a purchaser who assumes payment of the mortgage debt cannot recover from the mortgagor on account of a part payment made on the mortgage in the absence of fraud, mistake, or agreement to that effect;⁵⁰ nor can he, in an action against his seller, the mortgagor, acquire rights prior to those of the mortgagee by attaching the goods.⁵¹

§ 279. Criminal Responsibility

- a. In general
- b. Character and validity of mortgage
- c. Intent

- d. Unlawful disposition of property
- e. Want of consent

a. In General

Subject to variations, it is generally by statute made a crime for a mortgagor to remove or dispose of mortgaged property without the mortgagee's consent and to his detriment.

By statute, in many jurisdictions, it is a crime to sell, remove, conceal, or otherwise dispose of mortgaged property without the mortgagee's consent,⁵² and the character of the offense as a felony or misdemeanor depends on the terms of the statute under which prosecution is brought,⁵³ or on the value of the property.⁵⁴ Such statutes are intended to protect the interests of the mortgagee by guarding against any disposal of the property without his consent,⁵⁵ and to protect the person to whom the mortgaged property has been sold,⁵⁶ and they may be broad enough to protect an assignee of the mortgage from the fraud of the mortgagee.⁵⁷

Statutes of this character, being highly penal, are to be strictly construed, such construction being dependent on the meaning conveyed by the words used and by the context considered in connection with the law existing when the statute was passed.⁵⁸ A strict literal construction will not, however, be given the statute if such construction would cause the statute to be of doubtful validity.⁵⁹

Absence of notice to purchaser. Under some statutes the failure of the mortgagor to notify the purchaser that the property sold is mortgaged is made an element of the offense.⁶⁰ Where the statute makes intent to defraud an element of the offense, the fact that the mortgage is recorded will

45. Waiver of lien

Whether bank released its lien by indorsing "O. K." on the mortgagor's bill of sale containing guaranty that mortgagor had the right to transfer the chattel free of all encumbrances is a question of law for the determination of the court, not a question of fact for submission to the jury.—Arkansas River Gas Co. v. not defeat prosecution for the sale of the mortgaged property,⁶¹ nor, under such statute, will the fact that accused informed the purchaser that the property was mortgaged, although it may serve to negative a fraudulent intent.⁶²

Demand on mortgagor. Where the statute does not so require, a demand need not be made on the mortgagor for the debt or mortgaged property, nor need there be a refusal of payment of the indebtedness on his part, as a condition precedent to the commission of the offense.⁶³

Failure to recite prior mortgage. As the purpose of a statute making it an offense for a mortgagor to execute a second mortgage on chattels, while they are subject to an existing mortgage by him without setting forth the existence of the previous mortgage in the subsequent mortgage, is for the protection of the public, the fact that the parties agreed that it was not necessary to make such a recitation in the subsequent mortgage does not relieve such omission of its criminality.⁶⁴

Knowledge of mortgage lien. In those jurisdictions where the statute is broad enough to make it an offense for any person to do the acts prohibited, a knowledge of the existence of the mortgage lien is a necessary element of the offense.⁶⁵

Loss sustained by holder of mortgage. Some statutes require that loss must be sustained by the holder of the mortgage in order to constitute an offense.⁶⁶ Under others such fact is not made an element of the offense.⁶⁷

Possession of property. Possession of the property prior to the time of disposition has been held to be an essential element of the crime.⁶⁸

b. Character and Validity of Mortgage-

The existence of a valid mortgage is essential to the commission of the offense.

It is essential to these offenses that there be a valid and subsisting mortgage,⁶⁹ although equitable mortgages and liens, as well as legal, may be held to be covered by the statute.⁷⁰ There must be a debt secured,⁷¹ and the property must be such as can be mortgaged.⁷² It has been held that the description of the property in the mortgage must be sufficient to identify it;⁷³ but it has also been held that the question as it arises in a criminal prosecution has no relation to the question of the sufficiency of description where the rights of third persons are involved, and that the fact that the description is defective is immaterial, where there could be no doubt but that the mortgagor disposed of property covered by the mortgage.⁷⁴ In the absence of statutory requirement it is not necessary that the mortgage be recorded,⁷⁵ but under some statutes the mortgage must be properly recorded,⁷⁶ although filing for recording has been held to be sufficient.⁷⁷

A mortgage executed and filed in another state from where the mortgagee resides and where the sale takes place is within the intent of a statute of the latter state punishing the sale or disposition of mortgaged property without the mortgagee's consent.⁷⁸

c. Intent

Where made such by statute, intent is an essential element of the offense.

Where the statute so provides, intent is an essential element of the offense.⁷⁹ An intent to defraud is made by some statutes an essential element of criminality in the case of sale, removal, or other disposition of mortgaged personal property.⁸⁰ Under other statutes it is not an element of the offense.⁸¹ The statutes in some jurisdictions make an intent to defraud an element of the offense where the act prohibited consists in the removal of the mortgaged property,⁸² but do not make such intent an element of the offense when the act prohibited consists of the sale, transfer, or further encumbrance of the mortgaged property.⁸³ So, under a statute making it an offense to "sell or dispose of mortgaged property," etc., where the act charged is "a disposition of mortgaged property by taking it beyond the limits of the State," it was held proper to inquire into the motive or intent of said act,⁸⁴ even though on a prosecution for the sale of mortgaged property, under such statute, an intent to defraud, or to defeat the lien, is not a necessary element, and will be presumed.⁸⁵

An unlawful disposition of the mortgaged property within the terms of the statute is an essential element of the offense.

An unlawful disposition of mortgaged property within the terms of the statute denouncing the offense is, of course, an essential element of the offense.⁸⁶ Where the statute applies merely to a "sale" of mortgaged property, a transfer by exchange for other property, where money does not pass, is not included;⁸⁷ but a statute making it an offense "to sell or convey" covers a transfer by

Failure to disclose whereabouts

A failure, after default, to disclose the whereabouts of mortgaged property constitutes a "secreting" of it.—People, on Complaint of Perman Bros., v. Francia, 253 N.Y.S. 857, 142 Misc. 143.

To whom made

A statute making it a felony for mortgagor of personal property to sell or dispose of it to any "person or body corporate," without consent of mortgagee, applies to sale or transfer of mortgaged chattels to partnership.—State v. Stapel, 170 N.W. 665, 103 Neb. 135.

Unauthorized manner of sale

The fact that the mortgage permits the mortgagor to sell the mortgaged property in a certain way will not defeat a prosecution for the sale of the property in a manner not authorized by the mortgage.—State v. Boyer, 68 S.E. 573, 86 S.C. 260—11 C.J. p 639 note 21.

When debt not due

A sale before the debt is due is not an offense under a statute prohibiting the sale of mortgaged property without the consent of the mortgagee, and without immediately discharging the encumbrance.—State v. Sullivan, 32 So. 55, 80 Miss. 596—11 C.J. p 639 note 35.

87. Miss.—State v. Austin, 23 So. 34.

exchange,⁸⁸ the execution of a subsequent mortgage on the property,⁸⁹ or the consignment thereof to a third person over a railroad,⁹⁰ since the word "convey" has the significance of "transfer," and means the passing of title and dominion from one person to another.⁹¹ The words "otherwise dispose of" mortgaged property or like words have generally been given a broad meaning for the protection of the mortgagee, and have been held to include concealment,⁹² and to mean to "sell, alienate, or to put away,"⁹³ but, where necessary to sustain the validity of the statute denouncing the offense, the words have been limited to a disposition in the nature of a sale.⁹⁴ Under a statute making it an offense for one to sell or dispose of mortgaged personal property, without the written consent of the holder of the mortgage or lien, etc., it has been held that the removal thereof to another state is such a disposition of the property as falls within the provisions of the statute,⁹⁵ although, under such a statute, it has been held that it is not necessary that the goods be taken beyond the limits of the state to constitute an unlawful disposition thereof.⁹⁶

Amount and application of proceeds. Where the statute does not make an intent to defraud an element of the offense, it is not, unless made so by the statute, a defense that the property was sold for less than enough, or only enough to pay prior claims;⁹⁷ but such fact does constitute a defense where the statute makes an intent to defraud an element of the offense.⁹⁸

Concealment. Some statutes also make it an offense to conceal mortgaged property;⁹⁹ and this has been held to include an intentional handling and shifting of the property in such a manner as to mis-

Effect of sale of part of property. Where the statute provides that the act of accused must be done with the intent to "hinder, delay or defraud the right of the mortgagee," a sale of a part of the mortgaged property will constitute an offense thereunder, if such intent is established, no matter how small a part of the property is sold.²

Effect of acquiring superior lien. Under a statute applying to all persons who deal with mortgaged property, a mortgagee who assigns the mortgage and subsequently acquires a superior lien thereon is not criminally liable for removing said property if he acquired said lien after assigning the mortgage, or if he acquired said lien before the assignment thereof, unless he made such representations at the time of the assignment as would estop him from asserting such prior lien.³

Removal of the property is made criminal under some statutes,⁴ but is not a violation of a statute which makes it an offense for one to "sell or dispose of any personal property, on which any mortgage or other lien exists," etc.,⁵ unless the removal had the effect of defeating the lien.⁶ Under a statute making it an offense for one to remove property subject to an encumbrance or lien, from the county in which it may be, without immediately discharging such encumbrance or lien, it has been held that such removal must be completed by act of the party charged, or he must cause such removal to be done directly, and not remotely as a mere consequence of a sale to one in the county, who subsequently removes the property.⁷

one to "remove, permit, or cause to be removed, said mortgaged property, or any part thereof, out of the county with intent to deprive the owner of said mortgage of his security," it has been held that a removal of a portion of said mortgaged goods is equivalent to a removal of the whole and is a violation of the statute, even though the debt is partially paid, and the property remaining has been improved by repairs;⁸ and the fact that the mortgagor is solvent, or that the property remaining is sufficient to satisfy the debt, will not defeat the prosecution.⁹

The absence of the mortgagee's consent to the disposition of the property is ordinarily made a necessary element of the offense.

The statutes ordinarily make the absence of the consent of the holder of the mortgage lien a necessary element.¹⁰ As a general rule, consent may be proved by parol even though it contradicts the terms of the mortgage.¹¹ Under some statutes, however, consent must be in writing and oral consent constitutes no defense,¹² although under a statute providing that such writing should be the only competent evidence to prove the consent, it has been held that the statute should be liberally construed, so as to effect the purpose intended by the legislature.¹³

Effect of consent. In the absence of a provision in the statute to the contrary,¹⁴ where the mortgagee or his agent gives permission to the mort-

gagor to make a sale, it will defeat prosecution,¹⁵ even though the mortgagor has an intention of misappropriating the proceeds,¹⁶ or fails to pay the proceeds of the sale to the mortgagee in accordance with the condition on which consent is given.¹⁷

Property subject to two mortgages. Where the property is subject to two mortgages, under some statutes the consent of the inferior mortgagee is unnecessary to a sale and liquidation of the preferred mortgage debt;¹⁸ and where an intent to defeat the holder of the lien is a necessary element of the offense, it was held that the consent of a prior mortgagee, while not conclusive, tended to show that there was no intention to defeat the second mortgagee in the collection of his debt.¹⁹ Where, however, the statute makes it an offense for one willfully to sell, etc., mortgaged property, without the consent of the one holding the mortgage, and where an intent to defraud is not an element of the offense, it is no defense to a prosecution under such statute that the first mortgagee gave his consent to the sale of property subject to two mortgages.²⁰

Matters which negative an essential element of the offense are available as a defense.

In addition to the formal defenses available in criminal prosecutions generally, matters which negative an essential element of the offense are available as a defense.²¹ Accordingly, payment of the

14. Failure to inform purchaser

Under a statute punishing a mortgagor who sells mortgaged personal property without consent of the mortgagee, or without informing the purchaser that it is mortgaged, the mortgagor of an automobile is guilty of a violation of a statute if he fails to inform the purchaser of the mortgage, even though the mortgages consented to the sale.—State v. Bates, 194 N.W. 107, 156 Minn. 104.

Removal

Where, to sell property subject to mortgage according to agreement between mortgagor and first mortgagee, it is necessary to remove it in good faith from county, failure to obtain consent of junior mortgagees or lienholders does not make mortgagor guilty of the offense.—State v. Strong, 201 N.W. 858, 52 N.D. 197.

19. Ark.—Osborne v. State, 160 S.W. 215, 109 Ark. 440.

Informal foreclosure

Where there is a first and a second chattel mortgage, of record, covering the same property, and where the assignee of the first mortgage, by agreement with the mortgagor, authorizes and directs the sale of the mortgaged property at private sale, neither the assignee nor the mortgagor, acting for the assignee, will be punishable for the illegal disposition of mortgaged property, where it appears that there was no intention by either to defraud the holder of the second mortgage, and where the second mortgage in fact suffered no harm by such informal foreclosure.—Thompson v. State, 201 P. 1004, 20 Okl.Cr. 211.

20. N.D.—State v. Bronkol, 67 N.W. 680, 5 N.D. 507.

21. Recital in bill of sale that property was subject to mortgage constitutes no defense to a prosecution for selling mortgaged property with-debt, or that the full value of the mortgaged chattel has been turned over to the mortgagee in payment, in whole or in part, of the mortgage debt, has been held to constitute a good defense to a prosecution of this character,²² although it has also been held that such payment must have been made prior to the sale which is the basis of the prosecution.²³ The mortgagor may also show, by way of defense, that he was induced by fraud to give up the mortgaged goods.²⁴ An offer to the mortgagee of other property, in satisfaction for that sold or removed, will not protect the mortgagor from conviction;²⁵ and it follows that the mere ownership of such property by the mortgagor is equally unavailable by way of defense,²⁶ unless the substitution was made prior to the sale complained of.²⁷ Further it is no defense that the accused acted on, and in accordance with, the advice of counsel,²⁸ that defendant and his family were destitute,²⁹ that the mortgagee failed to advance mortgagor as much as agreed,³⁰ that their physician advised him to move or the family would die,³¹ nor that defendant sold the property for the purpose of getting to a place to earn money to pay the debt that he owed the mortgagee.³² The fact that no fraud was intended or resulted to the mortgagee by the removal of the goods is, in some jurisdictions, a matter of defense.³³

The fact that the mortgage was executed prior to the enactment of the statute is no defense where the property was sold subsequent to the passage of such statute.³⁴

Limitations. The time within which prosecution must be commenced is governed entirely by statute.³⁵

§ 281. — Persons Liable

The provisions of the statute under which prosecution is brought govern as to what persons may be guilty of the offense. Ordinarily such statutes are directed against the unlawful acts of the mortgagor.

While the statutes are primarily directed against the unlawful acts of the mortgagor,³⁶ in some jurisdictions they are broad enough to cover the unlawful acts of any person with a knowledge of the existence of the mortgage lien.³⁷ In other jurisdictions, the statutes also apply to one who purchases the mortgaged property with a knowledge of the lien,³⁸ or to one who aids or abets the mortgagor or other persons in the unlawful acts.³⁹ It has, however, been held that the acts of an agent, without the knowledge or connivance of the principal, will not make the latter criminally liable;⁴⁰ nor will the acts of one cotenant without the knowledge or connivance of the other impose liability on him.⁴¹ Where the body of the mortgage describes the property as belonging to a certain person, and given to secure his debt, it will not support the conviction of a different person merely because he joined in signing the mortgage.⁴²

Transferee

Where mortgaged property is transferred to one not a party to the mortgage, with full notice of the mortgage and with the knowledge and assent of the mortgagee, the transferee may deal with the property in all respects without regard to the statute. The reason for this is that personal property, covered by a mortgage, is the subject of daily transfer and has become so much a part of the usual routine of sales commerce that the courts will not attempt to add burdens not already placed thereon by the legislature.—*Miller v. § 282. — Venue

Venue is usually laid in the place where the criminal act took place.

Venue is ordinarily laid in the jurisdiction where the criminal act took place.⁴³ Accordingly, in the absence of statutes the place of sale or other disposition of the property has been held to determine the venue irrespective of where the mortgage was executed or where the property was brought from.⁴⁴ Likewise, where the disposal of mortgaged chattels was the shipping of them out of the state for the purpose of sale, it is punishable in the county from which shipment was made, notwithstanding the state line was crossed from another county.⁴⁵ However, it has been held that if the property is taken to another county with the intention of disposing of it there, and is sold in the latter county, the offense may be prosecuted in either jurisdiction.⁴⁶

§ 283. — Preliminary Proceedings in Prosecution

In prosecutions of this character before a magistrate, it is sufficient to designate the offense, either in the complaint or warrant, by name only, or by words from which it may be inferred.

It has been held to be sufficient, in a prosecution of this character before a magistrate, to designate the offense, either in the complaint or warrant, by name only, or by words from which it may be inferred. Consequently, a warrant charging the offense of "buying mortgaged property" can be reasonably interpreted as charging a violation of a statute the caption of which is: "Removing, Selling or Buying Property to Which Others Have Claim."⁴⁷

§ 284. — Indictment or Information

- a. In general
- b. Particular allegations

a. In General

The indictment must be definite and certain and must sufficiently set forth an offense under the statute on which it is based.

The indictment must be definite and certain and must sufficiently set forth an offense under the statute on which it is based,⁴⁸ and averments of mere legal conclusions are insufficient.⁴⁹ As a general rule, it is sufficient to describe the offense in the words of the statute, or by words clearly of the same legal import,⁵⁰ or equivalent to, or substantially the same as, the language of the statute.⁵¹ The indictment must be sufficient, however, to notify accused of what he is charged with having done;⁵² and, where the statute is very broad in its terms, it is proper to require the indictment to aver such other facts and circumstances as will bring the matter within the statute.⁵³ An indictment is sufficient if it is in the form prescribed by the statute.⁵⁴

b. Particular Allegations

The indictment should allege every particular matter which the law requires to be proved.

As a general rule, the indictment should allege every matter which the law requires to be proved,⁵⁵

Removal of property

Under a statute providing that prosecutions for offenses committed wholly or partly without and made punishable within the state may be carried on in any county in which the offender is found, a prosecution for removing mortgaged property from the state can be maintained in the county from which the property was removed, and to which defendant is returned on being arrested in another county.—Williams v. Designation of class

Since a statute providing that "any mortgagor of personal property, or his legal representative," etc., provides that the doing of a certain act by a person of a certain class shall be a crime, the information must allege that accused is of the class designated.—Little v. State, 32 P.2d 94, 55 Okl. Cr. 420.

and the want of these requirements cannot be aided by intendments,⁵⁶ nor supplied by the findings of the jury.⁵⁷

Absence of consent. In some jurisdictions, where the statute makes absence of the written consent of the holder of the mortgage an element of the offense, it is necessary that the indictment contain an allegation that the sale or removal of the property was effected without such written consent of the owner of the mortgage debt.⁵⁸ However, in other jurisdictions, where such written consent is also made an element of the offense, it has been held sufficient if the indictment fully negatives the idea that any sort of permission or consent was given.⁵⁹

Concealment. An information or indictment charging concealment of the mortgaged property is sufficient if it is sufficiently clear, definite, and explicit to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended,⁶⁰ and it is not objectionable because it does not state the specific means employed in the concealment.⁶¹

Description of mortgage. As a general rule, it is not necessary to set out the mortgage in hæc verba,⁶² although it is the better practice so to do.⁶³ However, since the existence of the mortgage as a valid and subsisting lien within the protection of the statute at the time when the offense was committed must be alleged,⁶⁴ the indictment must state the existence of the mortgage debt.⁶⁵ The fact that the title to a mortgage is erroneously alleged to be in the administrators of the mortgagee and not in his heirs will not render the indictment defective.⁶⁶

It is not necessary to allege that the mortgage is in writing,⁶⁷ nor that the mortgagor had a mortgageable interest in the property at the time the mortgage was executed.⁶⁸ Further, it is not necessary for the indictment to aver that the mortgage was recorded or filed for record,⁶⁹ unless the statute applies only to such liens as are recorded,⁷⁰ nor to aver that the mortgage was duly acknowledged,⁷¹ nor that the original mortgagees are still the holders of the lien.⁷²

Where the mortgage is in the form of a deed of trust and discloses the character of trusteeship, it is not necessary for the indictment to allege that the trustee holds the debt,⁷³ nor that he is trustee for the holder thereof.⁷⁴

Under the statute of jeofails, a failure to state in the indictment that the mortgagee is a corporation, when such is the case, is not fatal.⁷⁵

Description of property, ownership and value. It may be sufficient if the indictment describes the property so that it may be identified,⁷⁶ and shows it to be such as falls within the offense created by the statute.⁷⁷ If the property is incorrectly described in the mortgage, the indictment, after describing the Matter of inducement

property as contained in the mortgage, should further allege that such description was incorrect, stating wherein it was incorrect, and also allege the true description of the property.⁷⁸ However, it has been held that a sufficient description in an indictment will not support a conviction based on a mortgage in which the description is defective and insufficient.⁷⁹

Where the crime charged is denominated "larceny" by the statute, ownership must be alleged.⁸⁰

In those jurisdictions where the statute fixes a different degree of punishment, depending on the value of the property, it is necessary that the indictment contain such an allegation.⁸¹ Where, however, the degree of punishment does not depend on the value of the property sold or removed, it is not necessary that the indictment contain such an allegation.⁸²

Intent to defraud. Where the statute makes an intent to defraud an element of the offense, it is necessary that the indictment contain an allegation charging the accused with such an intent.⁸³ In those jurisdictions where the statute does not make the intent to defraud an affirmative element of the crime, it is not necessary that the indictment contain an allegation of such intent.⁸⁴ Under a statute which makes it an offense for one to do the prohibited acts with "the intent to defraud the mortgagee,"⁸⁵ or with the intent to defraud the "mortgagee or assignee of the mortgage,"⁸⁶ it is necessary to allege that the person defrauded comes within the terms of the statute, but under a statute making it an offense to do the prohibited acts with "an intent to hinder, delay or defraud such mortgagee, trustee or beneficiary, his heirs or assigns," an information charging that the purchaser of the property was defrauded has been held sufficient.⁸⁷

Name of purchaser. When the offense charged consists of the sale of the mortgaged property, in some jurisdictions it is necessary to state in the indictment the name of the purchaser thereof,⁸⁸ while in others no such averment is necessary.⁸⁹

Place of commission. Ordinarily, it is necessary to allege the place where the offense was committed,⁹⁰ although in some jurisdictions the statutes provide that, where the place of the crime is not charged in the indictment, it shall be considered as charging commission within the local jurisdiction of the court.⁹¹

Removal. Where the offense of removal of mortgaged property is defined by statute as a removal "beyond the limits of the county," it is necessary that the removal be charged to have been beyond the limits of the county.⁹²

§ 285. — Issues, Proof, and Variance

The evidence must conform to the allegations of the indictment, the state must prove the essential elements of the offense charged, and a material variance between an essential allegation and the proof offered to sustain it is fatal.

In a prosecution for the sale, removal, or other disposition of mortgaged chattels, the evidence must conform to the allegations of the indictment.⁹³

It is necessary for the state to prove the elements of the offense charged,⁹⁴ and in the absence of such evidence it is error to refuse a peremptory instruction in favor of defendant.⁹⁵ However, where ac-

The state must prove

(1) Ownership of the mortgage.—
State v. Gibson, 202 N.W. 108, 199 Iowa 377.

(2) That purchaser was unknown, where the indictment so charges.—
Thurman v. State, 43 S.W.2d 604, 119 Tex.Cr. 377.

(3) Failure to inform purchaser of mortgage, where such is an element of the offense under the statute.—
State v. Prince, 297 S.W. 34, 317 Mo. 840.

(4) That the property sold is that covered by the mortgage.—
Monasco v. State, 62 So. 427, 105 Miss. 551.

Written mortgage

In a prosecution for the fraudulent sale of property upon which a written mortgage has been executed, the mortgage must be in evidence.—

cused is charged with disposing of property covered by two chattel mortgages, it is sufficient if the evidence shows the unlawful disposition of the property under one of them.⁹⁶ Matters which the statute does not make an ingredient of the offense,⁹⁷ or surplusage in the indictment,⁹⁸ need not be proved.

To constitute a variance, the inconsistency between the indictment and the proof offered to sustain it must relate to a material allegation.⁹⁹

§ 286. — Evidence

The rules as to evidence in criminal cases apply in prosecutions of this character.

As already pointed out in § 285, the state must prove the essential elements of the offense charged, and the state must negative the legal presumption of innocence.¹ Where the statute makes intent to defraud an element of the offense, such intent must be proved by the prosecution, beyond a reasonable doubt, the same as any other allegation,² particularly where the offense is the removal of mortgaged property with intent to defraud the mortgagor;³ but, where the statute does not require a specific intent, fraudulent intent may be presumed as a necessary consequence of doing that which the statute prohibits.⁴ Where the absence of the mortgagee's consent is made an element of the offense, it has been held unnecessary for the prosecution, in the first instance, to prove that the sale took place without it.⁵

Admissibility. Evidence to be admissible must be relevant and material.⁶ However, when it becomes necessary to prove motive, intent, or knowledge on

Ill.—People v. McGinnis, 220 Ill.App. 29, 11 C.J. p 644 note 54.

Slight variations between the descriptions of the mortgaged property in the mortgage and the indictment are not fatal.—McClaskey v. State, 270 S.W. 498, 168 Ark. 339.

There was no variance

(1) For an indictment for fraudulently disposing of mortgaged property to name less property than is named in the mortgage.—Hardin v. State, 227 S.W. 676, 88 Tex.Cr. 495—11 C.J. p 644 note 54 [b] (6).

(2) Other examples see 11 C.J. p 644 note 54 [b].

Variance held fatal

(1) Indictment alleging bill of sale to property wrongfully sold was executed by defendant and another, and proof showing execution by other alone.—Holmes v. State, 147 S.E. 776, 39 Ga.App. 556.

(2) Where indictment was for moving mortgaged property from county, and conditional sale contract was introduced in evidence.—Williams v. State, 39 S.W.2d 79, 118 Tex. Cr. 386.

1. N.J.—State v. Moldenhauer, 136 A. 412, 103 N.J.Law 238.

2. Tacit authority to sell

Where a prosecution for illegal sale of personal property under mortgage is instituted in aid of adjustment of a civil liability, and the evidence shows that the mortgagor had tacit authority from the mortgagee to sell the property, but no written authority as stipulated in the mortgage, an actual intent to defraud must be shown to sustain a conviction, as distinguished from constructive fraud.—Mays v. State, 242 P. 580, 33 Okl.Cr. 185.

3. N.J.—State v. Moldenhauer, 136 A. 412, 103 N.J.Law 238, 11 C.J. p 645 note 56.

4. S.C.—State v. Haynes, 55 S.E. 118, 74 S.C. 450, 11 C.J. p 645 note 55.

Refusal to disclose whereabouts

(1) Intent to defraud may be inferred from refusal to disclose whereabouts of mortgaged ring, after default in payments thereon.—People, on Complaint of Perman Bros., v. Francia, 253 N.Y.S. 857, 142 Misc. 143.

(2) Under a statute which prohibits certain acts, and further provides that on the failure of an officer, after a diligent search, to find the property, or on the failure of the mortgagor to produce it on the demand of the mortgagee, it should be prima facie evidence as to the disposition and intent, in the absence of evidence on the part of the accused, to explain or justify the acts proved by the prosecution, he will be presumed to have intended the necessary consequences of his own act, and the burden is on him to explain or justify the acts proved by the prosecution.—State v. Holmes, 26 S.E. 692, 120 N.C. 573.

(3) However, on a prosecution under such statute, where there was evidence tending to show that the sale or removal by the mortgagor would not have the effect of "hindering, delaying or defrauding the rights of the mortgagee," no inference of a fraudulent intent would be made from the fact that the removal or sale was willfully and knowingly done.—State v. Manning, 12 S.E. 248, 107 N.C. 910.

Sale of mortgaged property without payment of the mortgage debt raises a presumption of intent to defraud.—Bowen v. Borland, 241 N.W. 201, 257 Mich. 306.

5. S.C.—State v. Williams, 14 S.E. 819, 35 S.C. 344.

Affirmative defense of mortgagee's consent to the sale must be proved by accused.—Folmar v. State, 97 So. 768, 19 Ala.App. 435.

6. Ala.—Little v. State, 144 So. 462, 25 Ala.App. 273—Folmar v. State, 97 So. 768, 19 Ala.App. 435, 11 C.J. p 645 note 63.

Evidence held admissible

(1) In general. Ark.—McClaskey v. State, 270 S.W. 498, 168 Ark. 339.

Kan.—State v. Gorman, 216 P. 290, 113 Kan. 740.

(2) As to the possession of the property as tending to prove an element of the offense.—Swint v. State, 57 So. 394, 3 Ala.App. 93.

(3) To show that accused had parted with the possession of the mortgaged property.—Holcomb v. State, 94 So. 917, 19 Ala.App. 24, certiorari denied Ex parte Holcomb, 94 So. 921, 208 Ala. 698—11 C.J. p 645 note 78.

(4) Evidence of the means, other than the brand mark, by which the mortgagee identified the cattle.—People v. Iden, 142 P. 117, 24 Cal. App. 627.

(5) Since the progeny of mortgaged animals born after the making of the mortgage become subject to the lien created by the mortgage, evidence as to the birth thereof.—Swint v. State, supra.

Evidence held inadmissible

(1) A writ of attachment which the part of accused,⁷ or to impeach accused,⁸ greater latitude is allowed in the admission of testimony and it is competent for the prosecution to prove such acts, conduct, or declaration of accused as tend to establish such motive, intent, or knowledge,⁹ or to impeach accused, provided the court limits it to the particular purpose for which it was introduced.¹⁰ The note which the mortgage was given to secure is admissible as it relates to the indebtedness of accused.¹¹ A mortgage is admissible in evidence if its execution is properly proved;¹² but where the statute requires the mortgage to be executed in a certain manner a mortgage which does not comply with the statute is inadmissible.¹³ Secondary evidence as to the mortgage is not admissible in the absence of the proper foundation.¹⁴

Evidence which tends to show an absence of fraud on the part of accused is admissible in his behalf.¹⁵ Accordingly, evidence that the sale was made in order to pay the debt of a prior lien, the subsequent mortgagee refusing the balance of the proceeds,¹⁶ or that the proceeds of the sale were entirely consumed in discharging the prior lien,¹⁷ is admissible as tending to show an absence of fraud. Under a statute requiring the written consent of the mortgagee to removal or sale of the property, it has been held that evidence as to a verbal consent or acquiescence is not admissible in defense,¹⁸ although it has also been held that such evidence is admissible in mitigation of punishment,¹⁹ or in determining whether there was a fraudulent intent on the part of the mortgagor.²⁰ Where, however, the property is sold without the consent of one holding a superior lien, evidence that the proceeds were applied to the payment of a subsequent mortgage, known to be an inferior lien, is not admissible to show the absence of fraudulent intent.²¹

Weight and sufficiency. In prosecutions of this character, the state has the burden of proving the offense charged in the indictment by evidence sufficient to satisfy the jury of accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty.²²

§ 287. — Trial and Review

The rules as to trial in criminal cases generally apply.

The trials of prosecutions for the wrongful sale or other disposition of mortgaged property are governed by the usual rules of trials in criminal cases.

Questions of law and fact. In prosecutions of this character, questions of fact are to be tried by the jury.²³ Where the evidence is not undisputed, whether the property sold was subject to the mortgage,²⁴ whether the mortgagee consented to the sale,²⁵ the mortgagor's ownership of the property at the time he executed the mortgage,²⁶ and the mortgagor's intent in making the sale²⁷ have been held to be questions for the jury.

Where the evidence fails to establish the necessary elements of the offense, accused is entitled to an instruction directing the jury to find a verdict of not guilty.²⁸

Instructions. The instructions of the court to the jury must correctly state the law,²⁹ and clearly present the issues raised by the evidence.³⁰ They must also be free from argumentativeness and must not give undue prominence to the testimony of a single witness.³¹ An erroneous refusal to give an instruction is not remedied by an instruction which does not present the issue as made by the facts;³² but an error, if any, in overruling a motion to require the state to elect, whether it would rely for conviction on a concealment, or on a sale of the mortgaged property, is cured by an instruction that a conviction can be had only on one of the acts charged.³³

Verdict. The verdict must conform to the charge in the indictment or information,³⁴ although a general verdict of guilty may be sufficient.³⁵ It should also be responsive to the evidence offered in the case,³⁶ and to the issues presented by the instruc-

Circumstantial evidence

In a prosecution for the sale of mortgaged property with intent to defraud mortgagee, the fraudulent intent may be shown by circumstantial evidence, where the circumstances naturally, logically, and clearly tend to and justify an inference of such intent.—State v. Wilfong, 220 P. 250, 114 Kan. 689.

Name of purchaser

If the name of the purchaser was known, such fact will rebut the presumption that it was unknown, and will not support an allegation that it was unknown.—Thurman v. State, 43 S.W.2d 604, 119 Tex.Cr. 377.

Fraudulent intent

(1) Fraudulent intent is an inferential fact to be drawn by the jury.—Foster v. State, 7 So. 185, 33 Ala. 182.

(2) It must be gathered from all of the attendant facts and circumstances.—Galbreath v. Wilson, 10 Ky.L. 638.

(3) A proof of the sale or removal of the mortgaged property with a knowledge of the lien will authorize a jury to infer a fraudulent intent, unless there are attending circumstances to repel the inference.—Foster v. State, supra.

36. Mo.—State v. Miller, supra.

Verdict in conjunctive

Under a statute making it an offense to sell or dispose of mortgaged chattels with intent to defraud, a verdict finding accused guilty of selling and disposing of the property may be upheld where the evidence shows a disposal of the property, tions of the court.³⁷ The verdict must also be definite and certain,³⁸ and furnish the facts necessary to enable the court to pronounce sentence, since verdicts cannot be supplied with material and important findings omitted by the jury, unless by a reasonable degree of inference and interpretation the verdict may be rendered certain beyond a reasonable doubt.³⁹

§ 288. — Sentence and Punishment

Punishment for offenses of this character is a matter of statutory regulation.

The maximum punishment for offenses of this character is usually prescribed by statute,⁴⁰ and the sentence imposed should not be excessive.⁴¹

XI. LIEN AND PRIORITIES

§ 289. In General

Mortgages are ordinarily valid between the parties irrespective of defects which would invalidate them as to third persons. A mortgage is not a lien within the meaning of certain statutes designating the holder of the lien as lienor, factor, or consignee. A person who gains a prescriptive title by adverse possession has rights superior to the lien of a mortgage by the prior owner.

The question of whether a mortgage transfers the legal title or operates merely to create a lien is considered supra § 1. As a general rule a mortgage is valid between the immediate parties, irrespective of defects, errors, or circumstances which would invalidate it as against one who has acquired a title through a bona fide purchase from the owner, without notice of a weakness in the title, or through a similarly bona fide encumbrance created by such owner.⁴² Mortgages are not "liens upon merchandise or the proceeds thereof" within the meaning of a statute providing that "liens upon merchandise or the proceeds thereof created by agreement for the purpose of securing the repayment of loans or advances made or to be made upon the security of said merchandise and the payment of commissions or other charges provided for by such agreement, shall not be void or presumed to be void or fraudulent . . . provided" particular notices are posted "stating the name of the lienor, and designating said lienor as 'lienor, factor or consignee,'" since they are not liens at all, are not created by agreement, and are not given to secure the payment of commissions or other charges, and a mortgagee could in no true sense be designated as "lienor, factor or consignee" in a sign to be posted.⁴³

Adverse possession. A person who obtains the property otherwise than through or under the mortgagor, and who holds it in adverse possession for the statutory period, thereby gains a prescriptive title superior to the lien of the mortgage.⁴⁴

§ 290. Commencement of Lien

- a. In general
- b. Crop liens

a. In General

The lien of a mortgage does not attach until the debt is created, and, where covering after-acquired or nonexistent property, not until such property is acquired by the mortgagor or comes into existence.

Since a mortgage is but an incident to a debt, no lien arises until the debt is created.⁴⁵ Thus a mortgage covering future advances will attach only from the date of the advances and not from the date of the mortgage,⁴⁶ and a conditional lien does not become operative where the contingent balance of indebtedness, for the security of which the lien is given, never comes into existence, according to the plain and unambiguous stipulations set forth in the instrument creating the lien.⁴⁷ Also a mortgage given to secure a debt substantially in excess whether or not it would have warranted a conviction if the charge had been merely of selling.—State v. Gorman, 216 P. 290, 113 Kan. 740.

Felony or misdemeanor

Where the statute makes the offense a felony where the chattel is valued at more than fifty dollars, and a misdemeanor if its value is less than fifty dollars, the verdict should indicate whether accused was found guilty of a felony or a misdemeanor so that the jurisdiction of the appeal may be determined thereby.—State v. Griffin, Mo., 228 S.W. 800.

Subsequent crop if present crop insufficient

Where bill of sale to peach crop, made to secure advances by broker, of the amount a prior mortgage was given to secure will not be considered a renewal mortgage the lien of which attaches as of the date of the first mortgage.⁴⁸

Under a statute requiring that a mortgage be "forthwith filed" to be valid against creditors, if it is so filed the inception of the lien is from its execution and not from the date of its registration.⁴⁹

After-acquired or nonexistent property. Although in some jurisdictions a mortgage of personal property to be acquired does not attach to that property, at law or in equity, as it comes into the hands of the mortgagor,⁵⁰ as a general rule the lien of a mortgage covering after-acquired property or property not yet in existence attaches as soon as, but not before, the property is acquired by the mortgagor or comes into existence.⁵¹ As between the parties, a lien on rents and profits arises at the date of execution of the mortgage providing therefor.⁵²

b. Crop Liens

The lien of a mortgage covering crops in existence attaches when the mortgage is executed; but, where it covers crops to be grown after the execution of the mortgage, the lien attaches when the crop comes into existence which ordinarily is when it is planted or sown.

The lien of a mortgage given on crops in existence attaches when the mortgage is given.⁵³ While a mortgage upon crops to be grown after the execution of the mortgage is generally held to be valid, as appears supra § 32, and, although it is held in some jurisdictions, in accordance with the express provisions of statutes in force therein, that mortgages on crops to be planted have the same force and effect to bind such crops and their products as other mortgages to bind property already in being, provided only the crops are planted within provided that net proceeds of sale should be applied in payment of advances and, if insufficient, that broker would have title to following year's crop as security for such unpaid balance, and net proceeds exceeded amount of advances, there was no indebtedness for security of which lien on following year's crop could arise.—*Dingfelder v. Possession by mortgagee

Where the rights of third persons have not intervened, the taking of possession by the mortgagee of after-acquired property in the assertion of a right previously given confers a title which relates back to the date of the mortgage.—Petition of Post, C.C.A.Mass., 17 F.2d 555, reversing, D.C., in re Robert Jenkins Corporation, 11 F.2d 979, certiorari denied *evy v. Condition precedent

Mortgagor's acquisition of title is condition precedent to property's becoming subject to mortgage under clause covering after-acquired property.—Hodes v. Mooney, 152 A. 205, 8 N.J.Misc. 851, 9 N.J.Misc. 48.

Considered a lien, not a conveyance

This rule "is what is termed the equity rule, and is generally followed where the mortgages are held to be mere liens, and not transfers of title".—Alberts v. Alberts, 221 N.W. 80, 81, 53 S.D. 463.

Lien equitable before possession by mortgagee

A mortgage covering after-acquired property is effectual to charge the property as soon as it is acquired by the mortgagor, and before possession is obtained by the mortgagee, with an equitable lien.—Perkins v. Loan, etc., Bank, 20 S.E. 759, 43 S.C. 39.

Realty converted into personality by severance

(1) Where a mortgage provided that mortgagee should have a lien on all the wood cut on the land and that mortgagor should from time to time execute such mortgages as should be necessary to protect the same, and it was held that, although the agreement could not take effect until the wood should be cut and severed from the realty, it attached instantly and could be enforced against mortgagor and all persons claiming under him with notice.—Wood v. Lester, 29 Barb.N.Y., 145.

(2) A mortgage on ores to be mined does not attach until the ore is actually mined.—Galloway v. Blue Springs Min. Co., Tenn.Ch.App., 37 S.W. 1016.

52. Iowa.—Soehren v. Hein, 243 N.W. 330, 214 Iowa 1060.

53. Mont.—N Bar N Land & Livestock Co. v. Taylor, 22 P.2d 313, 94 Mont. 350.

When crop exists

A crop of hay is in existence so that the lien of a mortgage will attach thereto where the roots are in the ground, even though nothing is growing at the time.—N Bar N Land & Livestock Co. v. Taylor, supra.

twelve months after the execution of the mortgage, or the mortgage is executed on or after a certain date in the year the crop is to be grown,⁵⁴ in general a mortgage on such crops does not give a present lien when the mortgage is executed, but the lien attaches only when the crop comes into existence and not before.⁵⁵ Also the lien of a mortgage on so much of the mortgagor's growing crop of a specified year as he puts into designated sheds attaches as soon as it is placed in the sheds, without further act on the part of the mortgagee.⁵⁶

Where, under the terms of the lease, title and possession of the crops are reserved in the lessor until after a division of the crops and settlement between the lessor and lessee, a mortgage by the lessee upon the crops to be grown on the land leased attaches to the equitable interest of the tenant when the crop comes into existence;⁵⁷ and the instant when settlement is had and a division of the crops made, the tenant's equitable interest becomes a legal interest to which the lien of the mortgage attaches, regardless of who is then in actual possession of the crop, and even though the crop has been delivered to an elevator for general storage and the tenant can only require a return of like kind, quality, and amount.⁵⁸ A mortgage by a landlord of his share of the crop which he is to receive as rent under a lease whereby the legal title to the crops and the right to their exclusive possession are in the tenant until a separation and delivery of the rent share, attaches a lien to the landlord's share as soon as it is ascertained and set apart, if not before.⁵⁹

Time crop comes into existence. For the purpose of attaching the lien of a mortgage, a crop comes into existence when sown or planted⁶⁰ or, in some states, as soon as the crop is above the ground, and possibly at the time of the germination of the seed;⁶¹ but in no instance does the lien attach prior to the actual planting or sowing, the preparation of the land for sowing or planting being insufficient therefor.⁶²

Relation back of lessee's subsequently acquired leasehold interest. Where a mortgage on crops to be thereafter grown is executed prior to the time the mortgagor leases the land on which the crop is to be grown, the lien of the mortgage attaches only from the time of the execution of the lease.⁶³

Relation back of lease interest

Title, right, and interest acquired by mortgagor by lease subsequent to § 291. Scope and Extent of Lien

- a. In general
- b. Crop mortgages

a. In General

The lien of a mortgage attaches only to the property described therein and only to the mortgagor's interest, and is enforceable only to the extent of the debt secured. The lien attaches to the property in its entirety where another knowingly changes its form or adds to its value, but it creates no interest in or lien on the land on which the chattels are located.

The lien of a mortgage in respect of its amount is enforceable only for the debt secured by the particular mortgage.⁶⁴ As to the property covered, in the absence of express agreement, the lien is limited to the property described in the mortgage,⁶⁵ and to the extent of the mortgagor's interest therein.⁶⁶ Where the mortgagee elects to follow the specific article upon which his lien exists and to have it subjected to the satisfaction of his claim, his security attaches to the article in its entirety, and he will not be compelled to release any portion of it because another has knowingly changed its form or added to its value.⁶⁷ A mortgage of chattels creates no interest in, or lien on, the land on which they are located.⁶⁸

property is acquired by purchase or is manufactured or produced, attaches only to such interest therein as the mortgagor acquires.⁶⁹ Property acquired by the mortgagor, after the execution of a mortgage covering after acquired property, will, as appears supra § 118, be subject to the mortgage, if within the description of the covenant, however alien it may be in quality or function to the property presently subjected to the lien; but to spread the lien of the mortgage to property acquired by purchasers of the mortgaged property or successors of the mortgagor, there must be an independent ground of duty, which may have its origin in a statute or in a covenant of assumption or in the principles of estoppel or accession, or in some other kindred equity.⁷⁰

b. Crop Mortgages

A crop mortgage creates no lien on the land on which the crop is grown, but covers only the mortgagor's interest in the crop, so that, where the mortgage covers crops to be grown in the future, if, when the crop is grown, the mortgagor has no interest therein no lien attaches because of the mortgage.

A crop mortgage does not affect in any degree the title to the land upon which the crops covered by said crop mortgage are being grown.⁷¹ In accordance with the general rule that the lien of a mortgage attaches only to the mortgagor's interest mortgage on crops to be raised on leased ground inured to the mortgagee as security for the debt owing it by the mortgagor and related back to the time of the execution of the mortgage.—Fargo Loan Agency v. Larson, 207 N.W. 1003, 53 N.D. 621.

in the property described, stated supra § 291 a, a mortgage of crops by one tenant in common of the crop,⁷² or by one joint owner of the land on which the crop is grown,⁷³ covers only his interest in the crop; and, when the mortgagor retains an interest in the crop as rental, as where he is to receive a share of the crop raised, such interest only will be covered by his mortgage.⁷⁴ So a mortgage on crops to be thereafter grown does not give the mortgagee a lien or charge on the land, but attaches only to the interest which the mortgagor has, or may acquire, in the crops when they come into being.⁷⁵ Thus the lien of a mortgage does not attach to crops sown by others than the mortgagor, except in so far as the mortgagor has or retains an interest in them,⁷⁶ so that, if for any reason the

Separate mortgages by tenant and landlord

Mortgage by landowner on entire crop attaches only to the interest of the landowner in the proceeds of the crop, and a subsequent mortgage by the tenant on the crop attaches to the tenant's interest in the crop free of any interest by the mortgagee of the landowner.—Merriman v. Martin, 298 P. 95, 113 Cal.App. 167.

Effect of cropsharing agreement on prior mortgage

Where a mortgagor gave a mortgage on crops to be sown in the future, and then contracted with D to raise them, D to have two thirds of the crops for his labor, although title was to remain in the mortgagor until division, it was held that the mortgage did not attach to D's share.—Christianson v. Statute altering time lien attaches immaterial

Statute providing that mortgages on crops to be planted shall have the same force and effect to bind such crops and their products as other mortgages now have to bind property already in being, requiring only that the crops shall be planted within twelve months after the execution of the mortgage, does not change the law with reference to the subject matter of the mortgage so far as enlargement of the power of the mortgagor to create a lien on the property in excess of his interest therein is concerned.—Snerly v. Stacey, 298 S. W. 213, 174 Ark. 978.

Tenant's interest not covered by landlord's mortgage

(1) Mortgages given by owner of land on crops to be raised thereon the following year, whether made before or after his contracts with tenants to cultivate it for such year and pay him as rent one-fourth of crops produced, attach only to his one-fourth interest.—Reynolds v. Polk, 109 So. 698, 144 Miss. 223.

(2) One who was not the owner of land having made a lease to a tenant on the basis of an equal division of the wheat crop between the lessor and the lessee, the holder of a mortgage on one third of the growing crop given by lessor is not prima facie entitled to any of the lessee's half, in the absence of a showing as to the relations between the owner of the land and the lessor, since the mortgagee's interest is carved out of the mortgagor's, and he can assert no greater right against the mortgagor's tenant than the mortgagor could have done.—Hoxie State Bank v. Brewer, 224 P. 896, 115 Kan. 756.

Mortgagee of tenant's crop as against landlord

Where tenant under crop-sharing agreement with landlord abandoned the lease and the landlord harvested the crop, a mortgagee of the crop of the tenant is entitled to no greater share of the crop, as against the landlord, than the tenant would have received had he harvested it himself.—Labbitt v. Bunston, 277 P. 805, 84 Mont. 579.

Tenant's interest acquired by landlord

Crop mortgage, given by landlord excepting tenant's share, held prior lien on all crops, where tenant subsequently became mere employee, taking second crop mortgage for past services.—Monroe v. Hall, Tex.Civ. App., 290 S.W. 289.

Interest mortgagor held to possess

(1) Where tenant agrees to pay the landlord as rent a specified share of the crops raised, the tenant is not vested with full title to the growing crop, but each party has at all times an ownership in the growing crops proportionate to the share he will ultimately receive.—Devereaux Mortg. Co. v. Walker, 268 P. 37, 46 Idaho 431.

(2) Where son owning two-thirds interest in farm farmed the entire farm, but without any agreement for the raising of the crop having been entered into, a mortgage given by the son on the crop to be raised thereafter was a lien on only a two-thirds interest in the crop and not an eight-ninths interest, even though it was customary for landlords and tenants to divide crops two-thirds to the tenant and one-third to the landlord.—Farmers' State Bank of Reardan v. Chick, 255 P. 915, 143 Wash. 614.

76. Idaho.—Albrethsen v. Clements, 279 P. 1097, 43 Idaho 80—Lords v. Lava Hot Springs State Bank, 256 P. 761, 44 Idaho 316—Collins v. Brown, 114 P. 671, 19 Idaho 360.

mortgagor fails to plant or raise a crop on the land designated in the mortgage, a crop grown thereon is not covered by the mortgage.⁷⁷ For example, the lien of a mortgage by a tenant on crops to be thereafter grown does not attach to crops sown or planted after the tenant has surrendered the premises by either forfeiting, abandoning, assigning, or selling his lease.⁷⁸ Also the lien of a mortgage on future crops to be grown on land owned by the mortgagor does not attach to crops planted or sown after the mortgagor has conveyed the land,⁷⁹ or leased it, retaining no interest in the crop to be grown,⁸⁰ as where he leases the land for cash,⁸¹ except however, it has been held under statutes recognizing as effective in the present crop mortgages on existing crops and upon crops next maturing, that an owner of land who has executed a valid chattel mortgage upon the next maturing crop cannot defeat the same by a subsequent arrangement whereby a lessee with notice is to raise the crop, paying a cash rental.⁸² However, where the mortgagor, the owner of the land, severs the rents from the reversion by including in the crop mortgage all rents accruing during the year, thus effecting a transfer to the mortgagee of the rent claims or rent obligations of the tenants on the land for that year, a purchase by, or conveyance of the mortgagor to, another of the land, subsequent to the execution and recordation of the mortgage, will not defeat the rights of the mortgagee, as transferee of the rents, in a proper proceeding.⁸³

Crops raised by subtenant. Where a lessee of land for cash rent gives a mortgage on the crops to be planted and grown on the land as security for the rent, one who subsequently becomes a subtenant with knowledge of the mortgage is bound by the terms of such mortgage, and crops grown by him, as well as by the original tenant, are covered by the mortgage;⁸⁴ but crops grown on the land by a subtenant are not bound by a mortgage covering crops to be grown on the land, which was given by the original tenant as security for advances made to enable him to make a crop,⁸⁵ especially where the subtenant subleases the land prior to crop to be thereafter grown and then conveyed the land to another, taking a crop mortgage on future crops from the vendee as security for the purchase price, he did not thereby sow, or cause to be sown, the crop of the next year, and the lien he acquired was not an interest in the future crop, but a lien upon it which did not subject the crop itself to the lien of the mortgage given by the vendor.—Lords v. Lava Hot Springs State Bank, 256 P. 761, 44 Idaho 816.

Effect of owner taking crop mortgage from purchaser

Purchaser abandoning sale contract

Mortgagor's lien on crops for rent immaterial

A mortgage on all his right, title, and interest in crops that mortgagor "agrees to cultivate and produce during this year" on certain land did not give mortgagee a lien on crops raised on such land by mortgagor's tenants, who paid their rent in money, and not by sharing their crops, notwithstanding Crawford & M.Dig. §§ 6889, 6890, giving the mortgagor a lien on the crops for rent and supplies furnished by him to the tenants.—Belcher v. Winter, 233 S.W. 803, 150 Ark. 33.

St. Anthony & Dakota Elevator Co., supra.

Cash rental payable to assignee

Where landowner executes crop mortgage covering half interest in crop next maturing and subsequently leases land to one with notice, who is to pay cash rental equivalent to value of half of crop to third party as assignee of lessor and mortgagor, lien of mortgage was not defeated.—State Bank of Bremen v. St. Anthony & Dakota Elevator Co., 209 N.W. 351, 54 N.D. 264.

Indebtedness covered. A mortgage incorporated in a contract of sale of real estate which secures payments due in any given year by giving a lien on the purchaser's interest in all grain grown on the land during that year secures the whole amount of the purchase price where that amount is due and payable by reason of a default in payments to be made, and not merely the amount which would be due that year if a default had not been made.⁸⁷

§ 292. Priorities in General

Unless waived, the lien of a mortgage, if first in point of time, is given preference.

As hereinafter considered in § 297, the lien of a mortgage, where the statutory conditions with respect to execution, delivery, filing, or recording are complied with, is, if first in time, usually also held to be first in right, and, conversely, is held inferior to other valid liens prior in time. Priority of lien may be waived,⁸⁸ or, where secured by fraud, may be denied the party.⁸⁹ The priority of a mortgage is not affected by the statement of the mortgagor, without authority from the mortgagee, that the property is free from lien.⁹⁰

The question as to the identity of the property described in different mortgages does not present an issue as to priority.⁹¹

§ 293. Priority between Debts or Obligations Secured by Same Mortgage

There is a diversity of opinion as to whether a mortgage securing several items of indebtedness secures them all equally or whether they are entitled to priority in the proceeds of the security according to the order in which they mature or are listed in the mortgage.

In some jurisdictions a mortgage securing several items of indebtedness, in the absence of any special provision or agreement to the contrary, secures them all equally, so that no one has priority of lien over the other but all are entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of the security;⁹² and the order in which the items of indebtedness are listed in the body of the mortgage,⁹³ or the priority of their maturity dates,⁹⁴ is insufficient to indicate any intended priority of lien for one over the others.

In other jurisdictions, if there is no special provision or agreement to the contrary, several notes secured by a mortgage have priority of lien and are entitled to payment from the proceeds of the mortgaged property in the order in which they become due and payable, the note first maturing having preference;⁹⁵ and where two distinct kinds of liability are secured, the proceeds must be applied primarily to the payment of the liability first mentioned in the mortgage.⁹⁶ The mortgage debtor cannot, after the execution of the mortgage, control the application of the proceeds of sale.⁹⁷

Permission to sell not waiver

First crop mortgagee, expressly agreeing that hail insurer's mortgage should be prior, could not insist that insurer waived lien by permitting mortgagor to sell part of crop to pay insurer's note and harvesting expenses.—Home Ins. Co. v. Klous, Tex.Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 176, error refused.

Controlling equity not shown

Where a party acting at the same time as president and manager of a bank and trustee for minors obtained a mortgage as security for the unsecured and equally meritorious claims of the bank and the minors, no equity arose which gave the claim

§ 294. Priority between Mortgages

Subject to the effect of registration statutes and the effect of taking possession of the property mortgaged, mortgages generally have priority according to the order in which they attach as liens to the property mortgaged, unless intervening equities interfere.

Although, in the absence of the effect of registration statutes, the right of priority as between a senior and junior mortgagee is subject peculiarly to the rules of equity jurisprudence,⁹⁸ and a subsequent mortgagee may gain priority by virtue of an estoppel,⁹⁹ in general, successive chattel mortgages on the same property,¹ including duly recorded general mortgages covering after-acquired personal property,² have priority and the holders thereof are entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the property according to the order in which they attached as liens thereon.

Ordinarily the lien of a mortgagee who has notice, either actual or constructive, of the rights of another to a prior chattel mortgage,³ as where the second mortgagee has actual knowledge that the first mortgage covers after-acquired property,⁴ will be subordinated to the rights of that other; and where the second mortgagee accepts his mortgage with knowledge or notice of a prior mortgage he is precluded from asserting priority of his claim,⁵ except, in some jurisdictions, as against a prior unrecorded mortgage or mortgage recorded

Antedating insufficient to establish estoppel

Exposure to sale of property

Where automobile was not part of stock of goods when mortgage was executed, subsequent acts of mortgagor in exposing it to sale cannot destroy mortgage under statute declaring void mortgages on a stock of goods exposed to sale in the regular course of business, and such mortgage would be superior to mortgage given while car was exposed for sale.—*Laredo Nat. subsequent to the time limited by statute therefor, unless the second mortgage is merely of the mortgagor's right to redeem from the prior mortgage and not of the property itself.⁶

Under the registration statutes in force in various jurisdictions a mortgage, if recorded, or if possession is taken thereunder, precedes a prior unrecorded mortgage,⁷ irrespective of whether or not the second mortgagee had notice.⁸ Also, under statutes providing that a mortgage shall be absolutely void as against subsequent mortgagees in good faith unless filed or recorded or accompanied by a change of possession, an unfiled chattel mortgage is postponed to the lien of a subsequent mortgage taken in good faith, although the latter mortgage is not filed or recorded,⁹ although the first mortgage is filed before the second is filed.¹⁰ A verbal mortgage, not coupled with possession by the mortgagee, will not take precedence over a subsequent written mortgage taken without notice of the secret lien of the verbal mortgage.¹¹ Under a statute declaring a mortgage void unless acknowledged, a subsequent mortgage, although securing an antecedent debt, is superior in right to a prior unacknowledged mortgage,¹² especially where such written mortgage is recorded.¹³ A second mortgagee cannot complain that the mortgagor permitted the first mortgagee to resort to the property for payment, even if it entirely exhausted the security,¹⁴ and the purchaser from the first mortgagee in such case takes good title as against the second mortgagee.¹⁵

The lien of a mortgage which conveys a legal title is prior to the lien of a prior mortgage which conveys only an equitable title,¹⁶ where the legal mortgagee, when he took his mortgage, had no knowledge of the equitable mortgage.¹⁷ Under a statute providing that a mortgage shall be void as to third persons, unless the property be delivered to the mortgagee or the mortgage provide that it remain with the mortgagor and is accompanied with an affidavit of good faith, a mortgage of a stock of goods providing that the mortgagor may continue to sell them in the usual course of trade is inferior to a subsequent mortgage on the same goods.¹⁸

Where an owner of personalty executes a bill of sale to another who executes a mortgage thereon and delivers the proceeds to the owner, the possession of the property remaining with the owner and the bill of sale not being recorded, the buyer acting merely as the agent of the owner in the obtaining of the loan, such mortgage is superior to a subsequent mortgage by the owner to a mortgagee having actual knowledge of the prior mortgage.—*Iowa Nat. Attempted conversion of equitable into legal mortgage

Where a mortgagor gave a mortgage on his crop to a mortgagee prior to January 1st of the year in which the crop was grown and subsequent to that date gave another mortgage on the same crop to another mortgagee, his giving of another mortgage to the first mortgagee after the execution of the second mortgage does not convert the first mortgagee's prior equitable mortgage into a prior legal mortgage so as to give the first mortgagee priority of lien over the second mortgagee.—Houston Nat. Bank of Dothan v. J. T. Edmonson & Co., supra.

Mortgage voluntarily executed

Mortgage voluntarily executed and recorded by mortgagor without knowledge of mortgagee, and accepted by him thereafter, the mortgagor acting to avoid obligation to another creditor, does not have precedence over unrecorded equitable mortgage lien.—Hagist v. Vogt, Tex.Civ.App., 280 S.W. 350, reversing 276 S.W. 959.

given to secure future advances within a stated amount is superior, to the extent of the advances made within the amount stated, to a second mortgage on the same property executed and recorded prior to the time the future advances were made,²¹ especially, if at the time of making the additional advance the first mortgagee had no notice of the rights of the second mortgagee,²² but the lien of a senior mortgage which makes no provision for subsequent advances,²³ or under which the advances are optional,²⁴ does not give priority of security for advances made by the senior mortgagee subsequent to the execution of the junior mortgage.

Effect of taking possession. Where neither mortgage is recorded, the mortgagee first securing possession has priority;²⁵ and, in jurisdictions where mortgages must be recorded or filed in the county of the mortgagor's residence in order to constitute a lien, a second mortgagee in possession of the property mortgaged is entitled to prevail over a first mortgagee where both mortgages were recorded in a county other than that of the mortgagor's residence.²⁶ The lien of a second mortgage displaces the lien of a first mortgage where the second mortgagee takes possession of the chattels on the failure of the first mortgagee to take possession thereof,²⁷ or to extend his mortgage as required by statute,²⁸ within the statutory period after maturity of the debt secured by the first mortgage. Under a statute providing that a mortgage shall be void as against creditors, subsequent purchasers, and encumbrancers in good faith, unless filed or recorded, where a prior mortgage has not been recorded at the time a second mortgage is given, but possession is taken under the prior mortgage before the second mortgage is recorded, the first mortgage has priority.²⁹ It has been held that, where the mortgage is void as to other creditors because not filed, the mortgagee, if he takes possession of the mortgaged property with the consent of the debtor, may hold the property as pledgee.³⁰

Purchase-money mortgages. Where on the sale of personalty title passes to the purchaser prior to the execution of a mortgage to the seller as security for payment of the purchase price, a prior mortgage executed by the purchaser covering such property, as a prior mortgage covering after-acquired property, is superior to the chattel mortgage of the seller;³¹ but if no title passes to the purchaser until after, or except upon, the execution of a mortgage by the purchaser to the seller as security for payment of the purchase price, the lien of such purchase-money mortgage is superior to the lien of any mortgage covering such property executed by the purchaser prior thereto,³² except that a mortgage on future chattels may prevail against an un-

Delivery prior to sale immaterial

Purchase-money mortgage, executed at sale of threshing machine previously delivered to buyer, is superior to prior mortgage given by buyer.—Schnirring v. Stubbe, 225 N.W. 389, 177 Minn. 441.

Failure to retain lien in bill of sale immaterial

Where defendants, having a half interest in a laundry property, gave a mortgage covering all the property to a bank, and on the day the mortgage was recorded purchased from plaintiff the other undivided half interest, plaintiff not retaining a lien in the bill of sale, but taking a mortgage to secure the purchase price which he filed forthwith, the trans-

recorded purchase-money mortgage.³³ A purchase-money mortgage executed on the sale of personalty is inferior to the lien of a prior purchase money mortgage executed by the seller on his purchase of the property.³⁴

The lien of a mortgage, given to secure the payment of a part of the purchase price of chattels thereafter annexed to realty, will be protected as against a prior mortgage on the realty so far as it does not diminish the security which the real estate mortgagee would have had if there had been no annexation.³⁵

Priority between crop mortgages. In general the lien of the first of two crop mortgages is the prior lien³⁶ especially if the first mortgage is recorded.³⁷ So it has been held that a recorded mortgage on an unplanted crop is superior to a subsequent mortgage on the crop after it was planted;³⁸ but in some jurisdictions a recorded mortgage on an unplanted crop is inferior to a subsequent mortgage executed after the crop was planted where the second mortgagee had no other notice of the first mortgage except the record thereof, although, if the second mortgagee had actual knowledge of the first mortgage when he took his mortgage, it is inferior to such first mortgage.³⁹ However, a mortgage on crops executed before the mortgagor leased the land is inferior to a mortgage on such crops executed with the lease as security for the rent,⁴⁰ or to seed grain notes executed to obtain seed for the crop;⁴¹ but it is superior to a mortgage executed with the lease securing unpaid rent for a former year.⁴² A crop mortgage covering the crops of a future year or years for an indebtedness created in the year the mortgage was given, since it is only an equitable mortgage good between the parties, is inferior to a subsequent crop mortgage to secure advances to enable the production of the crop covered by the latter mortgage;⁴³ but a prior equitable mortgage is superior to the lien of a subsequent legal mortgage taken by a party who has notice of the rights of the equitable mortgagee.⁴⁴ A mortgage covering the mortgagor's interest in "the summer fallow to be prepared by the mortgagor" does not cover the crop grown on the land fallowed as against a subsequent mortgagee of such crop.⁴⁵ A chattel mortgage covering that portion fer by bill of sale and the taking of the mortgage were so related in point of time as to be one transaction so that the bank's lien was inferior to the plaintiff's lien.—Central Texas Exch. Nat. Bank v. Sparkman, Tex.Civ.App., 228 S.W. 297.

Mortgage executed between order and shipment of goods

A mortgage on goods given by the buyer after he had ordered them and before their shipment is inferior to a subsequent mortgage given by the buyer at the time the goods were shipped to secure the purchase price where the order provided that the buyer should give security before taking title to the property.—Klimes v. Jones, 7 Tenn.App. 583.

Mortgage transferred from old to purchased article

Mortgage taken on new truck in lieu of mortgage on old truck, by mortgagee knowing of trade-in transaction, and to enable owner to trade in old truck, would be inferior to seller's mortgage on new truck for purchase price.—Harrington v. Interstate Securities Co., Mo.App., 57 S.W.2d 438.

Postponement of real estate mortgage immaterial

The postponement of the real estate mortgage given prior to the execution of the chattel mortgage to the lien of a real estate mortgage given subsequent to the execution of the chattel mortgage will neither increase nor decrease the rights of the real estate mortgagee as against the chattel mortgagee.—Kramer v. Yocum, supra.

Collateral character of debt immaterial

Mortgage, including grain not covered by previous mortgage, held superior to subsequently executed mortgages, whether note secured by new mortgage was principal obligation or collateral to notes secured by original mortgage.—Wolf v. Larimer County Bank & Trust Co., supra.

Selection of portion of crop covered

Where one secures a first lien on portion of crop and later another secures lien on the remainder, the first mortgagee has prior right to select portion of crop to be applied to satisfaction of his mortgage.—Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank v. Henry & Younce, Tex.Civ.App., 78 S.W.2d 725.

Mortgage by holdover tenant

Prior crop mortgage given by holdover tenant in possession held superior to crop mortgage given after making formal lease.—Abbeville State Bank v. Wiley Fertilizer Co., 140 So. 431, 224 Ala. 421.

Cancellation of lease and execution of new one to mortgagor

Where a lessor permits lessee to remain in possession and cultivate the premises after an agreement to cancel the existing lease, and the lessee gives a crop mortgage to a third person on crops to be grown on such premise, of which mortgage lessor has notice, and lessor thereafter leases the premises to the mortgagor under a new lease, taking a second chattel mortgage on the crops for rent, the lien of the first mortgage is prior, and lessor is estopped to question its validity.—*Bank of Roberts v. of a crop due a joint owner as rental given by a purchaser of the joint owner's interest in the realty as security for the purchase price is superior to a prior mortgage on the entire crop given by another joint owner and third person who farmed the land.⁴⁶

Priority between crop and real estate mortgages. In general, the rights of a crop mortgagee as against a mortgagee of the land on which the crop is grown under a prior mortgage are no greater than those of his mortgagor,⁴⁷ and a crop mortgage is subject to a prior mortgage on the land on which the crop is grown.⁴⁸ However, since as appears in the C.J.S. title Mortgages § 313, also 41 C.J. p 625 notes 91-95, the right of the holder of a mortgage on real estate, pledging the rents and income as security, does not arise until action has been commenced to enforce collection of the debt, the lien of a mortgage on crops raised on the land is generally superior to the lien of a real estate mortgage on the land where the real estate mortgage has not been foreclosed or an attempt made to do so;⁴⁹ and a chattel mortgage, whether on present or future crops, which attaches as a lien on the crops before a real estate mortgagee obtains possession of the realty under a prior real estate mortgage which also covers the rents, issues, and profits is a superior lien on the crops to the lien of such real estate mortgage.⁵⁰ In jurisdictions where a real estate mortgage gives a lien on, and not title to, the mortgaged premises, for a consideration of which see the C.J.S. title Mortgages § 1, also 41 C.J. p 273 note 1-p 281 note 22 $\frac{2}{3}$, a crop mortgage which attaches while the mortgagor is in possession is superior to a prior real estate mortgage or deed of trust covering the rents, issues, and profits to the extent of the crops growing and maturing upon the mortgaged premises up to the time of the expiration of the period of redemption from sale under order of foreclosure of the real estate mortgage.⁵¹ Also, in some jurisdictions, a chattel mortgagee of crops has a superior

Mortgagor not in possession

However, crops grown by a lessee of the mortgagor after foreclosure of the real estate mortgage and during the period of redemption are not subject to a crop mortgage executed by the mortgagor subsequent to the institution of the action for foreclosure of the real estate mortgage but prior to the foreclosure sale.—Shintaffer v. Bank of Italy Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 13 P.2d 663, 216 Cal. 243.

Default of prior debt immaterial

Trust deed on land which gave holder right to possession, rents, issues, and profits, and appointment of receiver in case of default, constituted only passive lien upon growing beet crop, and where lien had not been ripened into active lien by receivership, mortgage on crop given by owners in possession held superior to lien of trust deed regardless of mortgagee's knowledge when he accepted mortgage of defaulted state of paper which trust deed secured.—Tolland Co. v. First State Bank of Keenesburg, 35 P.2d 867, 95 Colo. 321.

Realty mortgage not in terms covering produce

Real estate mortgage not in terms covering fruit crops was not lien thereon, and subsequent crop mortgage gave prior right to proceeds of fruit, notwithstanding receivership in proceedings to foreclose real estate mortgage where the fruit was severed before foreclosure sale.—Haines City Citrus Growers' Ass'n v. Petteway, 145 So. 183, 107 Fla. 344.

Crop well advanced at time of foreclosure

Mortgage given by landowner on orange crop for current year and on succeeding crops until debt should be paid held to give mortgagee lien on succeeding year's crop superior to lien of earlier purchase-money mortgage given on land containing orange grove, where both mortgages were executed subsequently to enactment of crop lien statute, and where crop was well advanced and default in purchase-money note had not occurred at time of giving crop lien.—Hughes v. Summit Realty Co., 162 So. 343, 120 Fla. 136.

Notice of realty mortgage immaterial

Chattel mortgagee had claim to crops superior to real estate mortgagee, where chattel mortgagee acquired title before real estate mortgagee ever acquired constructive possession, irrespective of whether chattel mortgagee had notice of clause in real estate mortgage giving equitable chattel lien on after-acquired property.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Shelly Seed Corporation of Holgate, 139 N.E. 654, 46 Ohio App. 548.

Marshaling assets

As respects priority between holder of trust deed on land and chattel mortgagee of beet crop and other personality of same obligor over right to proceeds from sale of beet crop where deficiency judgments had resulted from sales of both land and personality under foreclosures, chattel mortgagee in resorting to beet crop only after sale of other security and application of proceeds had showed necessity therefor properly marshaled assets.—Tolland Co.

right, as against a real estate mortgage of the land on which the crops were grown, to crops severed from the soil prior to a sale of the land under foreclosure of the real estate mortgage, although subsequent to the appointment of a receiver in the foreclosure suit.⁵² On the other hand, the rights of a real estate mortgagee or of those holding under or through him after possession, or the right to possession, of the realty has been obtained under foreclosure proceedings are superior to those of a subsequent mortgagee of the crops grown on the land in crops grown thereafter;⁵³ and, in some jurisdictions, of crops growing on the land and unsevered at the time the mortgagee, or those holding under him, obtain possession or the right to possession of the premises.⁵⁴ In jurisdictions where a real estate mortgagee has title to the land mortgaged and not merely a lien thereon, for a consideration of which see the C.J.S. title Mortgages §§ 1, 194-197, also 41 C.J. p 273 note 1-p 281 note 22 $\frac{1}{3}$, p 486 note 87-p 489 note 30, a real estate mortgagee who foreclosed his mortgage, obtained possession of the land and gathered the crops thereon, the mortgagor having failed to avail himself of his statutory right to retain possession of the realty in order to gather and remove the crops thereon by executing a bond to compensate the real estate mortgagee for such use and occupation, is not liable in an action in trover by a mortgagee of the crops for their conversion, since the real estate mortgagee is entitled to possession of the land and to a lien on the crops as security for his right to compensation for the use and occupation of the realty after foreclosure;⁵⁵ and the rights of a purchaser of land at a mortgage foreclosure sale to a crop thereafter grown thereon is superior to the rights of a mortgagee of the crop executed by a lessee of the mortgagor of the real estate mortgage.⁵⁶

Renewal mortgages. Since, as appears infra § 339, the giving of a new note and mortgage in renewal of, or in substitution for, the one originally given does not discharge the lien of the original mortgage, but the lien of the renewal mortgage attaches as of the date of the original mortgage, the acceptance by a prior mortgagee of a renewal note and mortgage in satisfaction of the original note and mortgage does not affect the right of his mortgage to priority over a mortgage executed subsequent to the original mortgage but prior to the renewal one, even though the renewal was made without the consent of the holder of the later mortgage.⁵⁷

Notice of suit asking receiver

Chattel mortgage not taken until after the real estate mortgagee had made application for a receiver in a suit brought to enforce the lien of his real estate mortgage, of which suit the chattel mortgagee had notice, is inferior thereto.—G. Crop mortgage securing cost of construction on land

Party who constructs improvements on land and releases title to such improvements, taking a chattel mortgage on future crops as security for the cost thereof, is not entitled to a lien on crops grown on the land after foreclosure of a prior real estate mortgage.—Wilkening v. Layne-

Arkansas Co., 17 S.W.2d 879, 179 Ark. 667.

Fruit crop mortgages

(1) Chattel mortgage will not take priority over earlier real estate mortgage as to fruit not yet begun in maternal flower.—E. C. Fitz & Co. v. Eldridge, 176 So. 539—Summerlin v. Orange Shores, 122 So. 508, 97 Fla. 996.

(2) Purported fruit mortgage executed after default in real estate mortgage which was being foreclosed before fruit had started into being by bloom was not effective to create a lien superior to a mortgage on the real estate.—E. C. Fitz & Co. v. Eldridge, supra.

(3) Real estate mortgage executed before enactment of statute permitting giving of chattel mortgages upon fruit crops to be grown upon lands held prior as to growing fruit to chattel mortgage upon fruit crops growing or to be grown on land covered by real estate mortgage.—L. gage ceases to exist by reason of the payment, and the priority of such lien, which is but an incident thereto, ceases to exist, and from that moment a second mortgage on the same property becomes eo instanti a prior lien and the holder of the second mortgage is entitled to possession of the mortgaged property according to the terms of his mortgage.⁵⁸

Ownership of chattel. A mortgage on personal property by one having title thereto is superior to a mortgage given thereon by another, irrespective of which is prior in time.⁵⁹

§ 295. — Priority of Record

As between recorded mortgages priority of record usually determines priority of lien in the absence of notice of the first mortgage or an agreement as to priority or some intervening event which releases the lien of the first mortgage, such as the removal of the property to another state or county, or the failure of the first mortgagee properly to renew his mortgage.

Priority of record usually determines priority of lien between recorded mortgages,⁶⁰ irrespective of the order of execution,⁶¹ in the absence of knowledge or notice of the first mortgage,⁶² or, as shown infra § 296, an agreement postponing the mortgage first filed. However, priority of record will not give priority of lien as between mortgages executed contemporaneously without any agreement between the parties that one shall take precedence over the other;⁶³ and, as between mortgages registered simultaneously, unless agreed or intended otherwise, priority will be given the mortgage first executed and delivered.⁶⁴ A recorded mortgage by the seller of goods is superior to a prior recorded

58. Colo.—Stokes v. Kirk, 75 P.2d 1041, 101 Colo. 591.

Prior lien restored

Where indebtedness secured by second mortgage was paid, the prior lien accorded second mortgage by reason of first mortgagee's failure to record statement required under statute or properly to extend his mortgage was extinguished and, as between the first and second mortgagees, the first mortgage was restored to its former position of priority.—Stokes v. Kirk, supra.

Balance of proceeds

Holder of inferior mortgage is entitled to recover of the holder of the superior mortgage the value of any mortgaged property received by the latter in excess of that called for by his mortgage.—Miller v. White, Tex. Civ.App., 264 S.W. 176.

59. Utah.—Wasatch Livestock Loan Co. v. Lewis & Sharp, 35 P.2d 835, 84 Utah 347.

Mortgage by coadventurers of title holders

Chattel mortgage innocently taken by third party from partnership having title and power to mortgage sheep purchased with money advanced by coadventurers under joint adventure agreement is superior to mortgages given by coadventurers to banks, although one of such mortgages antedated the mortgage held by third party.—Wasatch Livestock Loan Co. v. Lewis & Sharp, supra.

Fraudulent representation

Fraudulent representation to bank that title to property owned by partnership operating under joint adventure agreement was to vest in co-adventurers advancing the purchase money, on the strength of which representation the bank loaned money to the coadventurer and took his mortgage on the property, did not render such mortgage superior to a subsequent mortgage thereon by the partnership taken by an innocent third party in reliance on the true status of the parties.—Wasatch Livestock Loan Co. v. Lewis & Sharp, supra.

Fruit crop mortgages

(1) Recorded fruit crop mortgages do not take precedence over prior existing recorded mortgages covering land and fruit crops without consent of prior mortgagees.—Plant City Agr. Credit Co. v. Pool, 139 So. 595, 103 Fla. 806.

(2) Bill of sale of peach crop, since of prior date and recordation, held superior to mortgage on crop.—A. J. Evans Marketing Agency v. Federated Growers' Credit Corporation, 165 S.E. 114, 175 Ga. 294.

Where mortgagee acts in good faith

Where defendants took chattel mortgage in good faith, plaintiff's mortgage lien must depend for priority on mortgage itself and priority of execution and filing.—Alberts v. Alberts, 221 N.W. 80, 53 S.D. 463.

Location of property

Chattel mortgage first recorded in county in which mortgaged property was permanently located is prior in right to earlier mortgage subsequently recorded in county to which property was later removed, even though the earlier mortgage had been filed first in a county in which the property was never located.—Continental Supply Co. v. Badgett, 242 P. 209, 114 Okl. 1.

Disposition of proceeds of sale

Purchasers of mortgaged cotton at the market price who paid mortgagor the proceeds of his interest in the cotton which the mortgagor paid to the first mortgagee are entitled to an affirmative charge in their favor in an action for conversion of the cotton by the second mortgagees.—Pinckard v. Burnett Cotton Co., 105 So. 702, 21 Ala.App. 90, certiorari denied Ex parte Pinckard, 105 So. 703, 213 Ala. 520.

Prior filing number

A prior filing number on a mortgage indicates that it was filed before mortgages bearing subsequent numbers, and that it enjoys prior ranking privileges under statute.—Motor Finance Co. v. Universal Motors, La.App., 163 So. 721.

Indexing

Trust deed, recorded and indexed in same book before, but indexed in general chattel mortgage book after, chattel mortgage on same personality was inferior in lien.—Pruitt v. Parker, 161 S.E. 212, 201 N.C. 696.

mortgage by the purchaser of such goods where the purchaser left the goods in the possession of the seller and did not record his bill of sale.⁶⁵

Improper renewal. The lien of a mortgage, junior in point of recording, is superior to the lien of a mortgage, senior in point of recording, where the senior mortgage was not properly extended and the statutory requirements of a requisite affidavit as to good faith and amount due not strictly complied with.⁶⁶

Removal of property. In jurisdictions where the lien of a properly executed and recorded mortgage is not lost by removal of the property into another state, considered supra § 15, the lien of a mortgage executed and recorded in one state is superior to the lien of a subsequent mortgage executed and recorded in another state to which the property had been removed,⁶⁷ except where such removal was with the consent of the mortgagee,⁶⁸ or he had knowledge of it and failed to assert his rights within a reasonable time.⁶⁹

Registration of mistaken release. A second mortgagee is charged with constructive notice of a prior properly registered mortgage and holds subject thereto, notwithstanding a mistaken release and fraudulent registration thereof, where he had no actual knowledge of the mortgage or release and was not therefore misled.⁷⁰

§ 296. — Agreement or Understanding as to Priority

Ordinarily an agreement that a mortgage shall be made subject to another one postpones it thereto regardless of priority of record or the effect otherwise given to taking possession of the property, and estops the mortgagee from questioning the validity of the prior encumbrance.

An express agreement between the parties to a mortgage that it shall be postponed to other liens or encumbrances is valid and operative,⁷¹ as where the mortgage contains a recital that it is made subject to another,⁷² is valid and operative and will

Implied agreement

Agreement which will defeat purpose of mortgage transaction should not be inferred or implied against mortgagee without cogent evidence.—First Nat. Bank v. Witherspoon Livestock Commission Co., Mo.App., 90 S.W.2d 453.

Oral agreement

Oral agreement of grower's creditor for modification of contract relative to disposition of proceeds, under which the grower received additional advances from the crop mortgage is valid.—Schumann v. California Cotton Credit Corporation, 286 P. 1068, 105 Cal.App. 136.

Contract of pledge on future crop

Where owner of land executed contract of pledge on crop to be thereafter grown as security for advances of cash and supplies, and it was understood at the time, and so stipulated in the contract, that the lien of the bank was to be on only two fifths of the crop, three fifths having already been dedicated to water rent and land notes, the lien of the bank is limited to two fifths only of the crop, even though the contract dedicating a portion of the crop to the land notes did not create a lien on the crop as no money was advanced thereon.—People's Bank & Trust Co. v. Racca, 1 La.App. 222.

Postponement not shown by agreement

Agreement that purchaser of real estate should execute chattel mortgages on crops for improvements made in lieu of first payment contemplated purchaser should not default in payments to vendor and did not postpone the real estate mortgage to the chattel mortgage.—Wilkening v. Layne-Arkansas Co., 17 S.W.2d 879, 179 Ark. 667.

Misdescription

A mortgage, "subject to a prior mortgage" to secure payment of a sum "due A.," held to give priority to an earlier mortgage to "A. & Son," where it was the parties' intention that the second mortgage was subject to the mortgage to A & Son.—

Avery County Bank v. Smith, 120 S. E. 215, 186 N.C. 635.

Sufficiency of recital

Words "second mortgage" above caption of chattel mortgage is insufficient recognition by mortgagee that another's mortgage was paramount.—Brittain v. Collum, 45 S.W.2d 501, 184 Ark. 1193.

Earlier cases as to sufficiency of recital see 11 C.J. p 650 note 73 [a].

Pro rata division

(1) Where second mortgage on five hundred fifty acres of wheat states that it is subject to first mortgage on two hundred acres given to secure note for seven hundred dollars, which mortgage was not recorded, the first mortgagee is entitled to four elevenths of proceeds of wheat on five hundred fifty acres rather than seven hundred dollars, in absence of evidence showing what two hundred acres were under first mortgage and amount of wheat produced thereon.—Ingersoll Co. v. Belt, Mo. App., 71 S.W.2d 118.

(2) Where first mortgagee subordinated its lien on entire crop to bank's lien on one fourth of crop only, apportionment of proceeds of sale of crop between the two mortgagees in proportion that lien held by each bore to entire crop was proper.—Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank v. Henry & Younce, Tex.Civ.App., 78 S. W.2d 725.

Optional advances

A mortgagee secured by a crop mortgage for future advances, having made optional advances beyond amount specified, is entitled to lien to amount at which his mortgage was listed in subsequent mortgage.

postpone it thereto, if supported by a consideration,⁷³ without regard to questions affecting priority of record,⁷⁴ or the effect of obtaining possession of the property mortgaged.⁷⁵ However, a mere reference to the existence of a prior encumbrance does not recognize its validity as a superior lien except as it may comply with the requirements of the registration laws;⁷⁶ and in some jurisdictions, under statutes providing that unrecorded mortgages and mortgages not recorded within a designated time from the date of their execution are invalid against a person other than the parties thereto, a second mortgage which purports to convey the property described is superior to a prior unrecorded mortgage or mortgage recorded subsequently to the time designated by statute, even though by its terms it is made subject to the earlier mortgage; but if the second mortgage is merely of the mortgagor's right, title, and interest, that is, of his right to redeem under the first mortgage, a statement therein that it is subject to a first mortgage will cause the first mortgage to retain its precedence even though it is not recorded or was recorded subsequently to the time limited by statute therefor.⁷⁷

Ordinarily a mortgagee whose mortgage is made expressly subject to a prior mortgage is estopped to deny the validity thereof,⁷⁸ as by asserting that the encumbrance to which it is subject was defectively executed,⁷⁹ or insufficiently described the property,⁸⁰ or was fraudulent.⁸¹

The parties cannot, however, by their agreement alter the character of property as realty or personality so as to affect the rights of third persons;⁸² nor can the second mortgagee and the mortgagor by agreement between themselves alter or change the contract stated in the first mortgage unless the first mortgagee becomes a party thereto or estops himself by his conduct;⁸³ but the junior mortgagee may question the amount due under the senior mortgage.⁸⁴ The rule that a second mortgagee who takes expressly subject to a prior mortgage cannot assert the invalidity thereof does not apply as between the parties.⁸⁵ Where a sale of mortgaged property is made expressly subject to the mortgage, the purchaser is postponed thereto in spite of defects which would invalidate the instrument.⁸⁶ Although a subsequent mortgage recites that it is subject to a former mortgage, the second

Consideration shown

First crop mortgagee's waiver consenting that hail insurer's mortgage should be prior, made in consideration for loss payable clause in favor of first mortgagee, was supported by consideration, and estopped first mortgagee from insisting upon priority.—Home Ins. Co. v. Klous, Tex.Civ.App., 53 S.W.2d 176, error refused.

Antecedent debt

Landowner's subsequent agreement with crop mortgagee, financing tenant on mortgage subject to claim for rent, that mortgagee might pay lienable labor claims, and deduct from crop, covered only payments made after date of agreement and was without consideration as to payments made prior thereto.—Howell v. Violation of agreement as to filing

A second mortgagee who violated his agreement not to file his mortgage until a prior mortgage was filed by placing his mortgage on file as soon as practicable is not a mortgagee or lienholder in good faith and does not obtain superiority of lien thereby.—Home Nat. Bank of Cleburne v. Herd, Tex.Civ.App., 250 S.W. 250.

Misstatement of prior mortgage's recording

Recorded mortgage, containing recital that it is second to previously recorded mortgage, is not superior lien to former mortgage, even though former was not recorded.—Haney v. Holt, 16 S.W.2d 463, 179 Ark. 403.

Contemporaneous mortgages

Where parties to contemporaneous mortgages agree one should be prior lien and should be first filed, that mortgage is entitled to priority, although by mistake other is first filed.—Hill v. Bender, 6 P.2d 1081, 1084, 138 Or. 400, citing Corpus Juris. 11 C.J. p 650 note 71 [a].

§ 297. Priority between Mortgage and Other Liens

The lien of a valid mortgage, if first in time, is usually granted priority.

In the absence of the mortgagee's consent to, or estoppel to deny, the creation of a superior lien or right,⁹¹ the lien of a mortgage, where the statutory conditions with respect to execution, delivery, filing, or recording have been met, is, if first in time, usually also held to be first in right,⁹² unless a preference is granted by statute to the subsequent

Mortgage given priority

(1) Over a subsequent assignment.—Bainbridge v. Warburton, 129 A. 474, 98 N.J.Eq. 81.

(2) Over factor's lien.—Baker, Lyons & Co. v. American Agricultural Chemical Co., 77 So. 866, 201 Ala. 323.

(3) Over photostatic copies of record of mortgaged abstract plant, so that holders of such copies could not sell them to satisfy an alleged possessory lien.—Phegley & Cavender v. Swender Blue Print Co., 289 P. 500, 133 Or. 146.

(4) Over a subsequent mortgage, at least where the subsequent mortgagee had notice of plaintiff's rights, notwithstanding that plaintiff possessed an equitable mortgage arising from promise to give mortgage.—Weigand v. Hyde, 192 N.W. 198, 109 Neb. 678.

(1) A mortgage has priority over a subsequent garnishment of the mortgaged property or the proceeds thereof.

(2) If mortgagee shows either legal or equitable right to funds in hands of garnishee, the latter is protected against liability to garnishing creditor of mortgagor.—Scurry v. Quaker Oats Co., supra.

Judgment

(1) The rights of a mortgagee have priority over those of a subsequent judgment creditor, the mortgage having been duly recorded.—Williamson v. Johnson, 195 P. 562, 99 Or. 336.

(2) A valid mortgage given before delivery to secure the purchase price of a chattel is superior to the lien of a prior judgment against the mortgagor.—Papas v. Snow, 252 Ill. App. 120.

(3) Where, under the statute, a mortgage with a maturity date exceeding three years is valid during the three years, if the mortgagor or trustee took possession of the property on default within three years, the mortgage had priority over a judgment given subsequent to the recording of the mortgage.—Central Trust Co. of Illinois v. Sheridan Beach Hotel Bldg. Corporation, 259 Ill.App. 404.

Widow's lien

(1) Where the circumstances are such as to bring the case within the statute, a widow's lien, created by statute, will have priority over a mortgage.

Ga.—Gresham v. Loganville Banking Co., 122 S.E. 806, 32 Ga.App. 177.

lien,⁹³ and, conversely, is held inferior to other valid liens prior in time.⁹⁴ Indeed, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, a mortgagor has no power to impose a special lien on the mortgaged chattels which will take precedence over the mortgage⁹⁵ without the authority of the mortgagee, express or implied;⁹⁶ but the consent of the mortgagee to the creation of the lien may be implied.⁹⁷

Even though the mortgagor is in possession, he is not the mortgagee's agent; and the mortgagor does not, in the absence of some authorization by the mortgagee, sustain to the mortgagee any relation which authorizes him to contract any liability on his behalf or to contract a lien that shall have priority over his mortgage.⁹⁸ Mere knowledge on the part of the mortgagee that the property is being used under circumstances tending to create a lien is not sufficient to imply a grant of authority on his part.⁹⁹ A mortgage is also prior to an alleged statutory lien which has not been perfected in accordance with the statutory requirements.¹

After-acquired property. A mortgage intended to cover after-acquired property can only attach itself to such property in the condition in which it comes into the mortgagor's hands, as already considered in § 291, and hence the mortgagee will take it subject to all prior or superior liens;² but the mortgagee will have a lien superior to subsequent liens.³ Hence, a mortgage of property thereafter to be acquired will not have priority over the rights

Lien of partner as against mortgage of other partner

Where the partnership contract provided that one partner should loan money to the other partner for the conduct of the firm business, and have a prior lien on the firm property for such loan, he thereby became a creditor of the firm, entitled to priority over a mortgagee of the undivided interest of the other partner.—Malvern Nat. of a vendor retaining title under a valid conditional sale of such property, since the mortgagor acquires no title thereto.⁴ In equity, the lien of a mortgage on after-acquired property attaches as soon as the property is acquired by the mortgagor, and is superior to the lien of a judgment creditor with a levy on the same property under a judgment against the mortgagor.⁵ A judgment lien attaches to a growing crop only from the time it has an actual existence, while a mortgage on a crop to be made takes effect from the date of the mortgage, thereby taking precedence over the lien of the prior judgment.⁶

Execution. The lien of a valid mortgage has priority over the lien of an execution which subsequently attaches,⁷ but a mortgage lien is subject and subordinate to an existing execution lien.⁸

Garage keeper's lien. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a garage keeper does not have a lien on a motor vehicle for storage, services, and supplies which is superior to a prior mortgage thereon.⁹ The mere fact that the mortgagee knew that the mortgagor was keeping the machine in the garage does not imply his consent to the creation of a superior lien.¹⁰ On the other hand, where such a lien is granted by statute, a garage keeper has a lien for storage, services, and supplies furnished the mortgagor which is superior to a prior mortgage,¹¹ notwithstanding that the automobile is taken and returned daily to the garage.¹² Such a statutory lien, once acquired, is, of course, superior to a subsequent chattel mortgage.¹³

Mortgage securing future advances. Where the mortgagee under a mortgage providing for future advances possesses an option as to the making of such advances, his lien for advances made after notice of a subsequent mortgage which has been given on the property will be postponed to that of a junior encumbrance,¹⁴ and the same rule has been applied to a sale by the mortgagor.¹⁵ Future advances, however, will be protected even though made after a sale by the mortgagor,¹⁶ or after a sale under execution against him,¹⁷ when made by virtue of a liability incurred prior to the sale or notice thereof. Such advances have, likewise, been protected where at the time of the sale under execution the other property was sufficient to have discharged the debt.¹⁸ A judgment subsequent to a security given to secure future advances has priority over all advances made subsequently to the existence of such judgment.¹⁹

Purchase-money mortgages. A mortgage for the purchase price of an article executed to the seller by the buyer simultaneously with the acquisition of title is ordinarily accorded priority over claims which would outrank an ordinary mortgage,²⁰ but in some jurisdictions the lien of a purchase-money mortgage depends, as in the case of other mortgages, on priority of record or change of possession.²¹ Although there is authority to the contrary,²² a purchase-money mortgage executed simultaneously with the acquisition of title is superior to an antecedent mortgage covering after-acquired property.²³

§ 298. — Priority of Record

In the absence of a statutory preference, priority of record gives a chattel mortgage precedence over other claims or liens.

Not only does priority of record determine priority of lien as between successive mortgages, as already considered in § 295, but priority of record also gives a mortgage precedence over other claims or liens that are not granted a special preference by virtue of statute.²⁴

§ 299. — Livery-Stable Keeper's Lien

In the absence of a legislative intent to the contrary, a prior valid recorded mortgage has priority over a liveryman's lien.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the lien of a prior valid recorded mortgage will according to the weight of authority take precedence over the subsequently acquired lien of a livery-stable keeper on animals placed in his charge, unless such animals were delivered to the livery-stable keeper to be kept and cared for by him with the consent of the mortgagee, express or implied,²⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.²⁶

The lien of the liveryman will be superior to that of the mortgagee under a prior mortgage when the mortgagee consents to the mortgagor's leaving the animal in charge of the liveryman, or, being notified that it has been so left, permits it to remain, expressly recognizing the right to a lien thereon.²⁷

The consent of the mortgagee may be implied from the circumstances of the case, but the mere fact that the mortgagee leaves the mortgaged property in the possession of the mortgagor is not of itself proof of such consent.²⁸ Also the mere fact that the mortgagee does not object to the animals being kept by the livery-stable keeper does not constitute waiver or consent on his part.²⁹

Of course, where a statute so provides, the lien of a livery-stable keeper is superior to that of a mortgagee,³⁰ provided there has been a compliance with the statutory requirements, such as to giving notice.³¹ This superiority of lien may under the statute extend to wagons and other appurtenances.³² To entitle such lien to priority, however, it must arise from a compliance with the terms of the statute and not from agreement between the parties.³³

The priority of an agistor's lien over a mortgage is considered in the title Animals § 21 g.

Lien attaching before execution of mortgage.

The lien of a liveryman which had its inception prior to the giving of the chattel mortgage, which is taken with knowledge of the situation of the animals, is superior to that of such mortgage.³⁴ The lien of the livery-stable keeper, however, will be invalidated when he voluntarily permits the animals to leave his possession,³⁵ and in such case will be postponed to the rights of third persons without notice of the lien.³⁶ Where, however, the possession of the animal is tortiously obtained from the stable keeper by the owner or by anyone else, the lien of the stable keeper is not thereby destroyed,³⁷ even as against third persons having no notice of his lien.³⁸

§ 300. — Artisan's or Repair Man's Lien

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, or the express or implied consent of the mortgagee, the lien of a prior recorded mortgage on a motor vehicle is superior to that of a repair man's.

Ordinarily, as already considered in the title Bailments § 35 h, the mortgagor has no right to impose a lien for repairs on the mortgaged property superior to the mortgage, unless the facts indicate an implied consent on the part of the mortgagee that the mortgagor may incur expenses for repairing the property.

some jurisdictions regarded as inferior to that of the mortgagee,³⁹ in the absence of the mortgagee's consent to the creation of a superior lien.⁴⁰ The mortgagee's consent to repairs is not implied from the mere fact of the mortgagor's possession⁴¹ or an agreement that the mortgagor should keep the machine in repair.⁴² In other jurisdictions the mortgagee of the vehicle by allowing the mortgagor to have possession of it for use is regarded as having impliedly consented to a bailment of the vehicle for reasonable repairs which enhance its value, and the lien of a repair man for such repairs is held superior to the claim of the mortgagee, notwithstanding an additional agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee that the mortgagee shall pay for repairs, or even an agreement that no liens shall be incurred, since the law creates the lien and not the consent of the parties.⁴³

Of course, where a statute gives the repair man of a motor vehicle a lien superior to a prior mortgage, preference will be given the repair man's lien⁴⁴ even though he had knowledge of the prior

Right of possession

A provision in a mortgage giving the mortgagee the right of immediate possession on attachment or claim of the mortgaged property by any other person before payment has been held to preclude a subsequent repairman's claim for a lien.—

Not classed with conditional sellers

Purchase-money mortgagee of automobile is not in same class with conditional seller, under statute relating to repairmen's liens.—Commercial Credit Co. v. Hayes-Lamb Motor Co., 298 S.W. 217, 174 Ark. 945.

Validity of statutes

(1) "Statutes giving liens for services in repairing personal property and purporting to make such liens superior to all others have been construed to create liens superior to previous chattel mortgages, even though the lien claimant had knowledge of the prior mortgage. Such statutes have been held to be constitutional, provided the prior chattel mortgage was taken subsequently to the passage of the statute, and the mortgagor has been allowed to keep possession of the mortgaged chattel. The reason is that, in taking such a mortgage, the mortgagee does so with the knowledge of the lien given by the statute, and by leaving the property, such as an automobile, in the hands of the mortgagor, impliedly consents that he shall make a contract for repairs which are necessary to preserve the property and which enhance its value."—Commercial Credit Co. v. Hayes-Lamb Motor Co., 298 S.W. 217, 174 Ark. 945.

(2) Statute held valid.—Clark v. Davis, 254 P. 399, 123 Kan. 99.

mortgage.⁴⁵ Such a statute has been held not to authorize a lien for articles sold which are attached to the automobile, although a small charge is made for attaching them.⁴⁶

Where the repair man has a superior lien, either by virtue of the mortgagee's consent or by virtue of statute, the lien will be enforceable unless it is expressly or impliedly waived; the waiver must be intentional and it cannot be implied from the terms and conditions of the mortgage of which the garage keeper has no actual knowledge.⁴⁷ Ordinarily a repair man will lose his preference if he relinquishes his possession of the motor vehicle,⁴⁸ but he will not lose his priority where he was induced to part with his possession by false and fraudulent representations of the mortgagee.⁴⁹

50. No estoppel arises from the fact that a prior mortgagee later received a warehouseman's receipts to mortgagor for his deliveries of mortgaged wheat, and saw thereon warehouseman's notations that advances for the grain had been made.—First Nat. Bank v. White-Dulany Co., 209 P. 861, 121 Wash. 386.

Equal equities

Where the equities on future crops are equal, but where the right of a chattel mortgagee came into existence at the time of making the mortgage while that of a second mortgage on the premises came into existence thereafter at the time he filed a petition for foreclosure of his mortgage, the lien of the chattel mortgagee was given preference.—Equitable Life Ins. Co. v. Read, 246 N.W. 779, 215 Iowa 700.

Executory contract of sale

Where a person had sold a growing crop but no record or delivery was made and later executed a mortgage thereon for value, the original contract was merely an executory contract of sale, and did not pass title; and the owner, being in possession, conveyed to the mortgagee a title superior to the original purchaser. Also where a purchaser claimed title under the Pooling Act of 1907 he having furnished money and materials for the growing of the crop, his title was not prior to an innocent mortgagee without notice.—Dysart v. Hamilton, 11 Tenn.App. 43.

Possession as bailee of the lessor's portion of the crop does not give the lessee a lien for advances under the lease superior to the lessor's crop mortgagee, at least where title to crops remained in lessor until division thereof.—Bailey v. John W. Sward, Inc., 193 P. 952, 184 Cal. 395.

Cropping contracts

(1) The lessor is not liable in conversion for selling the tenant's share of crop, as against the tenant's mortgagee, where necessary to reimburse himself in accordance with the lease for certain contingent claims that he was compelled to pay for the tenant.—First Nat. Bank v. Saterren, 188 N.W. 62, 152 Minn. 101.

(2) The mortgagee of a growing crop planted by a tenant under a contract which entitles the landlord to a portion of the crop succeeds only to the interest of the mortgagor, and where the mortgage is made by the tenant, and the mortgagee converts the whole crop to his own use, he is liable for the share of the

A crop lien complying with statutory requirements and otherwise valid may be given preference over a later mortgage.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary or circumstances constituting a waiver or estoppel,⁵⁰ the lien of a crop mortgage prior in point of time will be given priority over a lien subsequently acquired,⁵¹ and an agreement giving a lien on crops, if prior in point of time to a chattel mortgage, will be given preference.⁵² Such an agreement, however, to be effectual must usually be properly recorded,⁵³ unless the mortgagee has actual notice thereof,⁵⁴ or there must be a delivery of the crop.⁵⁵

Mortgage executed by landowner

Recordation of crop mortgage executed by landowner alone did not give constructive notice of claim against cropper's share of proceeds to subsequent mortgagee of cropper's interest in proceeds of crop.—Merriman v. Martin, 298 P. 95, 113 Cal. App. 167.

Provision of lease giving landlord lien on crops for unpaid rent is in nature of chattel mortgage, and, lease not being recorded, his rights as against holder of subsequently executed recorded crop mortgage are same as if he depended on unrecorded mortgage.—Joeckel v. Gust, 268 S.W. 888, 217 Mo.App. 495.

Verbal promise

Crop mortgagees' right was superior to landlord's right under mortgagor's verbal promise of cropper's share in payment of debt.—Bohl v. Spratt, 211 N.W. 451, 50 S.D. 596.

Although a valid recorded crop mortgage cannot be rendered inferior by any subsequent agreement between the landlord and tenant to which the mortgagee is not a party,⁵⁶ where a crop mortgage is executed prior to the time of the making of the lease the lien of the mortgage is inferior to that of the landlord's reserved in the lease.⁵⁷

Where there is a conflict of interest between lien claimants on a crop, reference must be made to a general statute providing for the order of resort for payment of prior liens, at least if there is no statute applicable particularly providing for priority of chattel mortgages on crops.⁵⁸

For advances or supplies. The priority of a lien for supplies over a mortgage may be acquired by express agreement between the parties.⁵⁹

Tenant abandoning crop. A landlord renting on shares does not have, in the absence of statute or a reservation of a lien, a claim superior to mortgagees of the tenant abandoning the crop;⁶⁰ but the landlord does have such an interest in the whole crop that he may protect himself by caring for it and repay himself for such expense out of the tenant's share.⁶¹

b. Statutory Liens

Where a statute so provides, a crop lien may be superior to a crop mortgage, if there has been a compliance with statutory requirements with regard thereto.

Some statutes regarding statutory liens on crops for supplies advanced to enable the production thereof provide that such a lien shall take precedence over a prior⁶² or subsequent⁶³ valid mortgage, or an older judgment,⁶⁴ if the lien for advances is properly perfected as required by law.⁶⁵

Citrus fruit crop

A crop lien and mortgage on a citrus fruit crop, given by the owners of the land on which the citrus fruit crop was growing and to be produced, for advances of money to aid in the production of the crop, not purporting to have been made by a person engaged in the business of producing citrus fruits, or to aid in the business of producing fruits, but made to secure a note, executed by the lienor to represent amounts advanced by the lender to the crop owner to aid in producing the mortgaged crop, properly falls under Act 1925 c 10279, Comp.Gen.L. §§ 5741, 5742, respecting mortgages on crops, and not under Comp.Gen.L. § 5378, Rev.Gen.St. § 3515, giving a lien prior to other encumbrances, the two statutes being inconsistent with each other and being intended to have an entirely different field of operation.—Plant City Agr. Credit Co. v. Pool, 139 So. 595, 103 Fla. 806.

Irrigating lien

Where a statute so provides, the lien of an irrigating company furnishing water to the mortgagor is superior to a mortgage on the crops.—Texas Bank & Trust Co. of Beaumont v. Smith, 192 S.W. 533, 108 Tex. 265, 2 A.L.R. 771—Texas Bank & Trust Co. of Beaumont v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 195 S.W. 617.

Recording unnecessary, for privilege of one furnishing supplies for the making of a crop, and where it existed when a mortgage was given it was not affected by the mortgage.—Purity Feed Mills Co. v. Moore, 93 So. 196, 152 La. 393.

Such statutes will not be given a retroactive effect,⁶⁶ nor will the lien for supplies be extended beyond the terms of the statute creating it.⁶⁷ The fact that the crop is delivered to the mortgagee does not affect the priority of the lien for advances.⁶⁸ However, unless the advances are actually made the mortgage on the crop will have priority.⁶⁹ It has been held that a mortgagee of crops is not liable for supplies furnished the mortgagor to enable him to raise the crop, in the absence of any express agreement to pay therefor, although the crops are sold to pay the mortgage.⁷⁰ Where the statute provides that the landlord's lien for supplies furnished shall not operate against persons holding a mortgage for supplies of which the landlord had notice, it has been held that the landlord's lien for advances even after such notice was superior to the mortgage lien when it appeared that the advances were made for the common good of those interested.⁷¹

The lien of the mortgagee for supplies furnished a tenant cannot be defeated by any subsequent arrangement between the landlord and the tenant.⁷²

If there has been a compliance with statutory requirements,⁷³ a lien arising on a crop by virtue of a seed grain note has priority over a lien on the same crop acquired by means of a previously executed and filed chattel mortgage.⁷⁴

For rent. A landlord's statutory lien on crops accrues as soon as they come into existence, and hence has priority over any mortgage of the crops made by the tenant,⁷⁵ unless the mortgage on the crop was in existence at the time the land was acquired by the landlord,⁷⁶ or unless the landlord has lost his lien by a removal of the crop from the

Crop reserved as rent

Equitable lien of chattel mortgage on crops subordinate to that of landlord's has no application to part of crop reserved as rent and delivered to landlord.—White v. Kinney, 101 So. 426, 211 Ala. 624.

Mortgage before term

A mortgage on crops to be grown does not attach until the crop is planted and, therefore, a tenant cannot deprive the landlord of the lien expressly created by statute on crops to be grown or the increase to come into existence after the tenant has taken possession by a mortgage given just before the beginning of the term.—Dilenbeck v. Security Sav. Bank, 169 N.W. 675, 172 N.W. 486, 186 Iowa 308.

Notice

(1) Notice that a landlord's lien exists on the growing crop which is being subjected to a mortgage may be constructive as well as actual, and a knowledge of facts which would put a mortgagee on inquiry as to the mortgagor's tenancy will be as binding on the mortgagee as if he were fully apprised of all the facts which would affect the validity and priority of the landlord's lien.—Bowland v. McDowell, 297 P. 691, 132 Kan. 820—Shell v. Guthrie, 284 P. 420, 120 Kan. 632.

(2) The mere fact that it is crop mortgage charges mortgagee with notice that it is subject to any existing landlord's lien.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Reconstruction Finance Corporation, 162 So. 379, 230 Ala. 580.

Rent of grass lands

However, it has been held that the landlord's lien was superior to the lien of a mortgage even though the mortgage was executed before the land was acquired by the landlord.—G. M. Carlton Bros. & Co. v. Hoppe, Tex.Civ.App., 204 S.W. 248, error dismissed—Ivy v. Pugh, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W. 939.

Default in land mortgage

Where a chattel mortgagee knows at the time of taking a crop mort-

1,77 or where he has waived or lost,⁷⁸ or has expressly agreed to postpone,⁷⁹ his lien. The reason of landlord and tenant, however, is essential to the establishment of this statutory preferred lien.⁸⁰

After the rent has been paid from the proceeds of the crop, the balance will go to a mortgagee of the crop before it can be applied on an open account due the landlord from the tenant.⁸¹

That the mortgagor was in default on his mortgage on the land, where after foreclosure the mortgagor attorned to the land mortgagee who was the purchaser, the mortgage was inferior to the purchaser's lien for rent.—First Nat. Bank v. Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, 143 So. 567, 225 Ala. 387.

Purchaser at mortgage sale

(1) Under Remington Comp. St. § 1, the lien of a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale for taxes is superior to that of a mortgage, the crop mortgagee being charged with notice of this statutory lien where the chattel mortgage is executed after the real estate mortgage.—Davin v. Dowling, 123 P. 123, 146 Wash. 137.—Farmers' State Bank of Reardan v. Chick, 255 P. 915, 143 Wash. 614.—Mount v. Oklahoma State Bank, 236 P. 82, 134 Wash. 479.

(2) Purchaser, however, had no claim for taxes paid after foreclosure sale, or for interest on judgment, during redemption period as against a mortgagee claiming under the predecessors of farm property who could not redeem.—Pease v. Stephens, 122 P. 294, 173 Wash. 12.

Alabama

(1) The priority of a landlord's lien is not displaced by the mere removal of the crops from the rented premises. The priority of his lien exists until the crop has passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser, and the mortgagee is notified as such.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Reconstruction Finance Corporation, 162 So. 379, 230 Ala. 530.—Bellingrath v. Samuel, 122 So. 27, 2 Ala. 263.

(2) This rule is also applicable to the proceeds of the crop.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Reconstruction Finance Corporation, supra.

(3) As against landlord's lien, however, a warehouse company was entitled to protection as to advances security of cotton in warehouse, where company had no actual notice of landlord's lien. Under such circumstances, a description in the mortgage including cotton grown

"on my farm, or any other places cultivated by me, or in which I have an interest" is not notice that the cotton was raised on rented land.—Bellingrath v. Samuel, supra.

(4) On the other hand, it has been held that a mortgagee of an unplanted crop of cotton on leased premises had the legal title to a bale of cotton harvested from such crop and sold by the tenant and removed from the premises as against the landlord who never had possession, either actual or constructive, of the bale of cotton.—Mutual Warehouse Co. v. Hamilton, 55 So. 116, 171 Ala. 82.

Tex.—Farmers' Cotton Finance Corporation v. Collins, Civ. App., 9 S.W.2d 1054.

Preservation of lien

(1) Under a statute providing that the lien of the landlord shall not continue for more than one hundred and twenty days after the expiration of the term, where within that time the tenant delivers the crop to the landlord or his agent as security for the landlord's claim, his lien is preserved and is superior to a chattel mortgage on the crop.—Barlow v. Fuller, 163 S.W. 742, 157 Ky. 532.—Marquess v. Ladd, 100 S.W. 305, 30 Ky.L. 1143.

(2) Accordingly, where both the landlord and tenant are under a legal duty to deliver the crop to a cooperative association, the signing of a statement by them within the statutory period authorizing the association to pay the landlord's claim from the proceeds of the crop preserves the landlord's lien and as so preserved is superior to a chattel mortgage on the crop.—*Dark Tobacco Growers' Co-Op. Grain in elevators Farm laborer's lien on filing attaches to grain seized in foreclosure proceedings under mortgage on growing crops or crops thereafter to be grown, and placed in storage in elevators.—First Nat. Bank v. Weiss, 209 N.W. 780, 54 N.D. 371.

Notice that a laborer is employed in the production of the crop, at the time of execution of a crop mort-

in the mortgagor's lease to the contrary,⁸⁴ a laborer's lien is inferior to a prior valid mortgage.⁸⁵ To acquire the lien given by such statute it is necessary for the laborer to comply with its provisions.⁸⁶ It has also been held that the priority of a crop mortgage may be affected by the fact that the crops were rendered valuable by the labor and money expended by a receiver of the mortgagor.⁸⁷

§ 302. — Innkeeper's Lien

An innkeeper's statutory lien is superior to a mortgage on a guest's chattels which are brought to his premises.

An innkeeper's statutory lien on a chattel brought to his premises by a guest is superior to that of a mortgagee of the chattel, even though the mortgage was due when the chattel was brought to the hotel,⁸⁸ and this lien is not waived by failure to assert it on refusing to deliver the goods to a chattel mortgagee demanding possession under his mortgage.⁸⁹ An innkeeper will not be deprived of this statutory lien even though he had actual notice of the mortgage, as long as the guest was legally in possession of the goods and was the owner thereof.⁹⁰

§ 303. — Laborer's Lien

In the absence of a statute to the contrary or a waiver by the mortgagee, a laborer's lien is not superior to a prior valid mortgage.

In the absence of statute a laborer's lien is not entitled to superiority over a prior valid mortgage,⁹¹ particularly where the statute so provides,⁹² un-gage, is usually under the statutes, notice of the laborer's lien, thereby rendering it superior to the crop mortgage.

Priority statute construed

Where a statute providing for a laborer's lien upon a crop provides that liens "shall be paid and settled according to the priority of the notice of the lien filed with the justice or clerk," such a provision applies only to liens required to be filed with a justice or the clerk and, since a mortgage is not required to be so filed, the statute has no application in determining the priority of a laborer's lien over a mortgage.—White v. Riddle, 152 S.E. 501, 198 N.C. 511.

Relation back

A laborer's lien properly filed and the right resulting therefrom asserted in apt time relate back to the beginning of the work, and the rights of a mortgagee cannot prevail against such a lien, even though some of the crop has been appropriated to the mortgage before notice of lien was filed.—White v. Riddle, 152 S.E. 501, 198 N.C. 511.

In Texas

(1) It has been held that the lien of employee of mortgagor for labor in production of cotton crop took priority over a mortgage, where wages were payable on sale of first bale.—Lunsford v. Pearce, Civ.App., 19 S.W.2d 71.

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that the statutory lien, if any, of parties picking cotton, was inferior to prior registered mortgage lien thereon.—Westbrook v. Clinton Grocery Co., Civ.App., 9 S.W.2d 1044.

84. Threshing costs

Where a lease provided that the lessee would deliver to the lessor one half the threshed grain and would pay for threshing the entire crop, no interest of the lessee's crop mortgage could legally attach until after the threshing and division of the crop was completed, and this did not occur until after the lien for threshing and expenses incidental thereto had attached.—Lee v. less the mortgagee waives his right to priority in favor of the laborer's lien.⁹³ However, a mortgage executed after the liens of laborers have attached to the chattels is inferior thereto,⁹⁴ unless, under some statutes, the mortgage or security deed was taken bona fide by the grantee and without notice of such liens;⁹⁵ and under some statutes, a mortgage executed and recorded after the chattels have been furnished to, and used by, the employer is inferior to laborers' liens.⁹⁶ An unrecorded mortgage has also been held to be inferior to a laborer's lien for services rendered prior to the recording of the mortgage.⁹⁷

Under a statute providing that, where the property of the employer is placed in the hands of an assignee, receiver, or trustee, claims due for labor performed within a certain time prior to such appointment shall be paid first out of the trust fund, the claim of a laborer is inferior to that of a mortgagee, after condition broken, since the title to the property thereupon becomes vested in the mortgagee.²

§ 304. — Landlord's Lien

In the absence of a statute or reservation in the lease to the contrary, a mortgage on the tenant's property is superior to a landlord's lien for rent. Where the landlord is given a superior lien by statute, his lien usually is preferred where the mortgage was executed and recorded after the chattels have been placed on the premises, but is inferior to a mortgage thereon before they are placed on the premises.

In the absence of a statute conferring a lien for rent or the reservation of such a lien in the lease,⁵ a mortgage on the tenant's property is superior to the landlord's rights for unpaid rent,⁶ and the right to distrain for rent is subordinate to an existing mortgage,⁷ unless the mortgage lien has been waived or lost.⁸

5. Notice

The mere fact that at the time of execution of the mortgage the mortgagee had notice that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed, does not charge the mortgagee with notice and knowledge of a lien created in favor of the landlord by the terms of the lease.—Abraham v. American Nat. Bank, 17 P.2d 480, 161 Okl. 87.

Exempt property

(1) Where, under the statute, the landlord's lien does not extend to exempt property, a mortgage on such property is superior to the landlord's lien for unpaid rent.—Huebsch Mfg. Co. v. Coleman, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 639—Racugno v. Hanovia Chemical & Manufacturing Co., Tex. Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 249—McNabb v. Terminal Bldg. Corporation of Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 93 S.W.2d 189, error refused—American Law Book Co. v. Dykes, Tex.Civ.App., 278 S.W. 247.

(2) No subsequent act of the tenant in failing to claim the exemption will vitalize a lien that did not actually exist, so as to defeat the priority of a mortgage given at a time when the property was free of lien.—Huebsch Mfg. Co. v. Coleman, supra—McNabb v. Terminal Bldg. Corporation of Dallas, supra.

(3) Whether particular property is exempt may be a matter of fact to be determined in the light of the attending circumstances. — Huebsch Mfg. Co. v. Coleman, supra.

Rights of landlord purchasing property

Landlord purchasing tenant's mortgaged soda fountain fixtures on execution under judgment foreclosing landlord's lien could not acquire title thereto by limitation independent of lien as against mortgagee without giving mortgagee notice of adverse claim, since title acquired under execution sale was only that of mortgagor.—Liquid Carbonic Co. of Texas v. Logan, Tex.Civ.App., 79 S.W.2d 632.

Securing surrender of lease

Where plaintiff had, by virtue of mortgage, right as against defendant's tenant to enter and gather crop after expiration of year, defendant, who had knowledge of mortgage,

Antedating lease

The priority of a mortgage lien is not affected by the antedating of the lease by collusion between the landlord and the tenant.—Grey v. Hudson, 5 Iowa 554.

Existence of chattels at time of lease

The mere fact that, at the time the lease contract was entered into, none of the property in controversy was in existence and in place on the premises, does not make the landlord's lien inferior to a mortgage thereon.—Bank of Oakman v. Union Coal Co., C.C.A. Ala., 15 F.2d 360.

For taxes

Where the lessee is to pay all taxes on the leased property, the lessor's lien on improvements placed on the premises by the lessee for taxes which he has been compelled to pay is superior, under some statutes, to the lien of a mortgagee thereof.—Commercial Trust Co. v. L. Wertheim Coal & Coke Co., 102 A. 448, 88 N.J.Eq. 143.

Increase in stock

(1) A landlord's lien for rent on the increase in stock is superior to a mortgage on the stock.—Corydon State Bank v. Scott, 252 N.W. 536, 217 Iowa 1227—Wunder v. Schram, 251 N.W. 762, 217 Iowa 920—Mau v. Rice Bros., 249 N.W. 206, 216 Iowa 864.

(2) That deed to grantee and lease back to grantor were not recorded did not make lien of landlord for rent on increase of live stock coming into existence after execution of lease subject to earlier recorded mortgage on such increase, since statutory provisions for recording apply only to interests in land.—Corydon State Bank v. Scott, supra.

No conversion

One acting as landlord's agent in foreclosing lien could not be guilty of conversion of property.—Nuckles v. J. M. Radford Grocery Co., Tex. Civ.App., 72 S.W.2d 652.

Relation back to default

Where a contract of letting arises by virtue of a stipulation in an executory contract of sale that, on default, the relation of landlord and tenant shall arise and relate back to a prior date, the landlord's lien is superior to that of a mortgagee, notwithstanding the default was subsequent to the execution of the mortgage.—British, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Cody, 33 So. 832, 135 Ala. 622.

In Louisiana

(1) A lessor's lien is superior in rank to a mortgage if the lessor's lien exists before the mortgage is recorded, but is inferior in rank to the mortgage if the lessor's lien arises after the mortgage is recorded.

es¹⁰ on chattels of his tenant on the premises has priority over the lien of a mortgagee on such chattels given after they are placed on the premises, but will ordinarily be postponed to a prior mortgage on the property, or to a mortgage executed prior to the lease,¹¹ if the mortgage is executed and recorded as required by the statute.¹²

Under some statutes, the rights of the mortgagee

(2) Where there has been a novation of a prior mortgage after the lessor's lien came into existence, the lessor's lien is superior.—White Co. v. Hammond Stage Lines, 158 So. 353, 180 La. 962.

(3) Of course, a mortgage on the chattels which was recorded before they were placed on the premises is superior to the lessor's privilege.—Vickers v. Hughes, App., 160 So. 154—Peats v. Alphonse Brenner Co., App., 149 So. 365.

(4) A mortgage containing an insufficient description of the property does not prime the lessor's lien.—Hodge v. Collins & Chapman, App., 153 So. 157.

In South Carolina

(1) The landlord has no lien on the personal property of his tenant, other than on the crops raised on the demised premises, for rent due by his tenant. While the landlord has no lien on such personal property, the statutes have preserved to him, in a modified form, his common-law right to distrain on such property. The law, as now declared to be settled, is that, after distraint or its equivalent, the holder of a mortgage on chattels will have a superior claim to that of the landlord only when the mortgage was executed before the rental contract was entered into or before the chattels were brought on the rented premises, and recorded before the debt of the landlord was contracted.—Francis H. Leggett & Co. v. Orangeburg Piggly Wiggly Co., 180 S.E. 483, 176 S.C. 449—Mather-James Co., Inc. v. Wilson, 174 S.E. 265, 172 S.C. 387.

(2) If the mortgage is recorded before any proceeding in distress is taken, although executed before the chattels were placed on the premises, the lien of the mortgage ranks only from the date of record as against subsequent creditors, and the lien of the landlord is prior to the mortgage to the extent of the debt for rent due him prior to the record of the mortgage.—Francis H. Leggett & Co. v. Orangeburg Piggly Wiggly Co., supra—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Anderson, 174 S.E. 268, 172 S.C. 395—Mather-James Co. v. Wilson, supra—U. S. Hoffman Machinery Corporation v. Harris, 166 S.E. 613, 167 S.C. 443.

(3) Accordingly, if a rental contract is for a certain amount, the entire amount must be considered as due at the beginning of the contract, although payments might be made on a monthly basis, and if the chattels were brought onto the property before the mortgage was recorded, the landlord's lien has priority.—Francis H. Leggett & Co. v. Orangeburg Piggly Wiggly Co., supra.

(4) On the other hand, if the rental contract is by the month, the recorded mortgage ranks ahead of the monthly rent which is not due at the time of recording the mortgage.—Mather-James Co. v. Wilson, supra.

(5) It has also been held that where a tenant's mortgaged chattels were put on the premises before the mortgage was executed, the landlord's claim for rent had preference over the mortgagee's claim.—Ex parte Stackley, 159 S.E. 622, 161 S.C. 278—Dana v. Peurifoy, 140 S.E. 247, 142 S.C. 46—Morgan Silver Plate Co. v. Bobo Undertaking Co., 92 S.E. 720, 107 S.C. 280.

(6) If the lien of the mortgage was active at the time the chattel was distrained for rent, it was entitled to priority over the rent claim.—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Hanahan, 143 S.E. 820, 146 S.C. 257.

Renewal of note

When the note, for which a mortgage of the tenant's goods has been given as security before such goods are brought on the rented premises, is subsequently destroyed and a new note given in place thereof to a new trustee, such new note is not a renewal of the old, and, when duly recorded, will postpone the lien to the date of its making, and thus let in the landlord's lien.—Hechtman v. Necessity of recording mortgage as against purchasers and encumbrancers see supra §§ 142, 143.

Lien creditor

Under a statute which provides that every mortgage of personal property, where the mortgagor is allowed to retain possession, is void as to the lien creditors of the mortgagor, with or without notice, unless the mortgage is recorded, as required by law, a landlord is held to be such are postponed to the lien of the landlord where the mortgagor moves the mortgaged property on the leased premises.¹³ The landlord's lien does not depend on the contract with the tenant, but on the statute, and, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the fact that the rent contract is not recorded will not affect his lien,¹⁴ although to preserve his lien as against a mortgage there must be a compliance with any statutory requirements as to the recording of statements of rents due and unpaid.¹⁵

Under some statutes, the landlord's lien relates to the time of actual seizure under a distress warrant¹⁶ or attachment,¹⁷ and a mortgage previously recorded is superior, although a mortgage recorded subsequent thereto is inferior, notwithstanding that it was executed before the seizure.¹⁸ The landlord's lien, however, is superior to a mortgage given prior to the levy of attachment when the consideration for the mortgage is an antecedent debt.¹⁹

Reserving a lien for rent on chattels located on leased premises will give the landlord a prior claim thereon, unless at the time the property is brought on the premises it is subject to a valid mortgage,²⁰ or unless the mortgage was executed and recorded prior to the beginning of the tenancy;²¹ but such a reservation in favor of the landlord is in effect a mortgage and must be recorded to be effectual against a subsequent mortgage in ordinary form,²² unless the subsequent mortgagee has notice of the reservation in the unrecorded lease.²³ It has been a lien creditor, and not a mere lienholder, and the landlord's lien is, therefore, superior to such an unrecorded mortgage.—Berkey, etc., Furniture Co. v. Sherman Hotel Co., 16 S.W. 807, 81 Tex. 135—Liquid Carbonic Acid Mfg. Co. v. Lewis, 75 S.W. 47, 32 Tex.Civ.App. 481.

Mistake in mortgage recorded

Where, by mistake, the mortgage is recorded as for a smaller sum than it actually is, the mortgagee is entitled to a superior lien only as to the amount as recorded.—Nagel v. Ferriman, 294 S.W. 184, 219 Ky. 635.

Knowledge insufficient

That officers of bank which took a mortgage from tenant knew that rents were unpaid at time did not entitle landlord to priority of lien for unpaid rents, where landlord failed to file sworn statement with county clerk.—West Development Co. v. Crown Bottling Co., Tex.Civ.App., 90 S.W.2d 887, error dismissed.

Rental due immaterial

The mere fact that the rent was in arrears at the time of execution of the mortgage is immaterial if the rent claim was not filed until more than six months after the rent became due.—Walker-Smith Co. v. Winstead, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 1051.

Corrective mortgage

Where original mortgage was void as against mortgagor's creditors because of defective affidavit, corrective mortgage executed after mortgagor's landlord had extended credit by allowing six months' rent to accrue was void as to landlord who levied on chattels by distress warrant.—Resnick v. Jefferson Holding & Building Corporation, 187 A. 916, 14 N.J.Misc. 875.

Unrecorded sale

A landlord's general lien for rent, arising on the issuance and levy of a distress warrant, is superior to a tenant's unrecorded bill of sale of personalty to secure a debt, although the bill of sale was executed and delivered prior to the date of the levy of the distress warrant on the property covered by the bill of sale.—*Butler v. Deposit security

Where the tenant made a deposit with the landlord under the original lease as security for payment of rent, and it was provided that any assignment of the tenant's right should be subject to the lien of the landlord, landlord's claim for rents accruing up to the time of acceptance of tenant's surrender constituted a lien on the deposit superior to the lien of a subsequent mortgage thereon.—Von Schleinitz v. North Hotel Co., 23 S.W.2d 64, 323 Mo. 1110.

Return of mules

Where landlord rented farm with mules under lease requiring tenant to return personal property or equivalent in kind, and five mules died or were disposed of and tenant placed six new mules on farm, but it was not shown he did so as agent or on behalf of landlord or to replace the five mules, landlord had no title to five of the six new mules and could not maintain action for proceeds of sale under mortgage.—Forehand v. Edenton Farmers' Co., 175 S.E. 183, 206 N.C. 827.

Validity of lease, joinder of wife

Under a statute requiring a wife to join in an encumbrance of exempt personal property, a lease giving the landlord a lien on such property, which is not signed by the wife, is not superior to a subsequent valid mortgage covering such chattels.—Brownlee v. Masterson, 247 N.W. 481, 215 Iowa 993.

23. Iowa.—Brenton v. Bream, supra. 11 C.J. p 658 note 64.

held that the landlord under such a lease is not a subsequent encumbrancer for value, so the fact that the recording of the prior mortgage was defective and insufficient to give the landlord constructive notice is immaterial.²⁴

Of course, in order to be entitled to a preferred landlord's lien, the relationship of landlord and tenant must exist between claimant and the mortgagor;²⁵ and the claim for rent, if the lien is claimed under a statute, must be for unpaid rent within the time limited, if any, by the statute.²⁶

When no rent due. Under a statute providing that a landlord's lien shall attach only by reason of rent due or such as is accruing, the lien of a mortgage is superior to that of the landlord for his rent, if at the time the mortgage is executed the rent has been paid in full;²⁷ and, where the superiority of the landlord's lien only covers rents accruing before actual or constructive notice of the mortgage, the mere fact that the lien attaches for the full term as between the landlord and tenant cannot subordinate the title of the mortgagee who put his mortgage to record when no unpaid rent was due.²⁸ Where,

however, the statutory lien of a landlord for rent attaches at the beginning of the tenancy, or where the chattels are brought on the premises, a landlord's lien on chattels on the premises is superior to a mortgage thereon, even though at the time of its execution all accrued rents had been paid.²⁹ Also, where it is provided in the lease that the lien shall attach for rent to become due during the term of the lease, the lien is not defeated by a mortgage on the tenant's property, although at the time of its execution all accrued rents have been paid;³⁰ but where, after the expiration of the lease the tenancy has become one at will, on the expiration of the period at which the tenancy at will might have been terminated immediately succeeding the execution of a mortgage, and on the payment of rent for that period, the mortgage attains priority.³¹

Effect of renewal of tenancy. A valid mortgage lien created during one term of a lease is superior to a landlord's lien, existing during a second term of lease to the same tenant, that had not begun or been contracted for when the mortgage was executed;³² but the execution of a new lease covering the

Current contract year

A statute giving the landlord a lien for unpaid rent and providing that the rent to become due shall not continue or be enforced for a longer period than the current contract year, embraces a period of twelve months reckoning from the beginning of the lease or rental contract, whether it be in the first or any other year of the lease or rental contract.—Gray v. McFaddin, Tex.Civ. App., 8 S.W.2d 293, error dismissed.

Former year's rent

Where the statute does not give the lessor for a term of years a lien on crops of one year to secure the payment of rent for another year, the lien of purchaser of tenant's note and recorded mortgage on interest in crop, before maturity, for value and in due course, is superior to landlord's lien under unrecorded lease for unpaid rent.—Joeckel v. In Louisiana

(1) A mortgage recorded before the expiration of the first lease primes a new lease made subsequently.—Hardie v. Wright, 125 So. 312, 12 La.App. 52—Williams v. Federal Machine Shop, 8 La.App. 281—Bernhardt v. Sandel, 4 La.App. 648—Bernhardt v. Sandel, 3 La.App. 139.

(2) Where a tenant's holding over after the expiration of his lease constitutes a reconduction, the landlord's lien for rent after the expiration of the conventional lease primes a mortgage executed prior to the expiration of the term.—McKesson Parker Blake Corporation v. Eaves & Reddit, App., 149 So. 294—Comegys v. Shreveport Kandy Kitchen, 110 So. 104, 162 La. 103, 52 A.L.R. 931, reversing 3 La.App. 692.

(3) It has been held, however, that a reconduction constitutes a new contract for each month and that a chattel mortgage enjoys priority over a tacit reconduction made subsequent thereto.—Remedial Loan Soc. v. Solis & Trepagnier, 1 La.App. 164.

(4) It has also been held that reduction in rent of lease having no fixed time for its duration, and which had continued from month to month by reconduction, was not modification of existing lease, but constituted new lease; hence lessee's mortgage on property on premises which was recorded prior to rent reduction had unexpired term of the old lease will not postpone the landlord's lien to a mortgage on the goods on the premises, although it was executed before the change in the lease.³³ It has also been held, where the leases to the tenant had been renewed annually for a period of years, each including the same terms and conditions and each providing that any unpaid rental should be carried over and become obligations of the following years, that the leases should be deemed to be a continuing tenancy and that the lien covered the unpaid rentals of the tenancy and was superior to a subsequent mortgage.³⁴

§ 305. — Seller's Lien or Interest

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a seller's lien is superior to the lien of the buyer's mortgagee.

A lien for the purchase price in favor of a seller in possession is prior to that of a chattel mortgage executed by the buyer.³⁵ Where, however, chattels in the actual possession of the mortgagor under a valid contract of sale are mortgaged, the rights of the mortgagee are superior to those of the original vendor or those claiming through him.³⁶ When a mortgage covers after-acquired property, the rights of the mortgagee as to property subsequently purchased by the mortgagor are superior to the claim of the seller for the purchase money, even though the seller has reduced his claim to judgment and levied execution on the property sold him;³⁷ but a seller receiving a worthless check in payment has been held to be entitled to recover the chattels in preference to one holding a preëxisting mortgage on the buyer's goods owned and to be acquired, and taking possession thereof with knowledge of the seller's equity.³⁸ A statute declaring that property shall not be exempt from execution or attachment for the purchase price does not give the seller a lien,³⁹ and, notwithstanding such a statute, where possession of the property is delivered to the buyer who executes a mortgage thereon, the seller's rights are inferior to those of the mortgagee,⁴⁰ even though the mortgagee knows that the purchase price is unpaid.⁴¹

Where personal property is sold, but possession is retained by the seller, it has been held that a mortgagee from the seller without notice of the sale will be protected against the claim of the buyer.⁴²

Conditional sales. While there is authority to the contrary,⁴³ the general rule is, where unaffected by statute, that the lien of the seller under a conditional sale contract reserving title in the seller until performance of the condition is superior to that of a subsequent mortgagee of the buyer in possession;⁴⁴ but an absolute sale cannot be modified by priority over lessor's future rent claims.—Weaks Supply Co. v. Werdin, App., 147 So. 838.

General creditor

If two creditors have a claim against a common debtor, one for the purchase price of personal property and the other as a general creditor, the general creditor, even though he knows that the purchase price has not been paid, if he obtains a first lien by mortgage, will prevail over the creditor for the purchase price.—R. Williams & Co. v. Farm & Home Savings & Loan Ass'n, 272 S.W. 1006, 217 Mo.App. 554.

Mortgagee one of buyers

One of the buyers, privy to the giving of title note as security for part of the price, could not, by subsequent mortgage, acquire a superior lien on the property.—Doyle v. Ben-trup, 207 P. 859, 111 Kan. 442.

In Louisiana

(1) In the absence of a law requiring that a vendor's privilege on movable property be recorded in order to be effective against a mortgage, a seller of movable property, which is not paid for, has a preference on the price of his property, over other creditors of the purchaser, including mortgagees, if the property still remains in the possession of the purchaser.—Continental Bank & Trust Co. v. Succession of McCann, 92 So. 55, 151 La. 555—Weiss v. Hudson Const. Co., 91 So. 525, 151 La. 1—Eddy v. Weathers, 134 So. 259, 16 La.App. 634.

(2) As the law does not require a vendor's privilege on movable property to be recorded, the vendor's failure to record it does not estop him as against the taking of a mortgage on the faith of the records without making any other effort to ascertain if the property was free from privileges.—Weiss v. Hudson Const. Co., supra.

a subsequent agreement, so as to convert it into a conditional sale as against the rights of an intervening mortgagee.⁴⁵ Also, the lien of a conditional seller is superior where there has been a compliance with the recording statutes prior to the execution of the mortgage,⁴⁶ where the mortgagee has notice of the conditional sale,⁴⁷ or where the seller has retaken possession of the property during the time limited by statute for the superiority of his lien.⁴⁸ On the other hand, where the conditional sales contract was not properly recorded as required by law, the lien of a mortgagee of the buyer in possession as an encumbrancer for value is superior to that of the conditional seller,⁴⁹ even though the mortgage has not been properly recorded.⁵⁰ It has been held, however, that where neither seller nor mortgagee has complied with a statute requiring registration of the respective instruments under which they claim, they are left where they would have stood, regardless of the registry statute, and the first in time will prevail.⁵¹ A prior lien under an unrecorded contract of sale will prevail over a subsequent mortgage which does not clearly include the property on which the lien rests.⁵² Al-

Under Code 1907 § 3394, as amended by Acts 1911 p 115, requiring a contract retaining title to property sold until the purchase price is paid to be recorded within three months after the sale in order to be valid against innocent purchasers, a seller can retake possession of his property under his reserved title from a subsequent innocent mortgagee before the expiration of the three months after the sale, and need not then record his contract.—Motor Sales Co. v. Assignee

Where the mortgagee of a buyer received a valid lien because the conditional sale was not recorded, the mortgage is valid in the hands of the mortgagee's assignee, even though the assignee had knowledge of the existence of the conditional sale contract, since the assignee succeeded to the rights of the mortgagee as to whom the mortgage was superior to the conditional sale.—Hoeller v. though a mortgagee's rights are generally inferior as to property subsequently acquired by the mortgagor on a conditional sales contract,⁵³ even though the contract is not recorded,⁵⁴ the rule is limited to those cases wherein the mortgagee is neither an encumbrancer for value, nor possessed of equity, as against the conditional vendor with respect to such property.⁵⁵

§ 306. — Storage Liens

In the absence of a statute to the contrary or consent of the mortgagee thereto, a lien for storage is inferior to a valid chattel mortgage.

In the absence of statute, storage charges will not constitute a lien superior to the rights of the mortgagee,⁵⁶ but otherwise if the mortgagee consents to the storage of the property.⁵⁷ By statute, however, a mortgagor may be empowered to impose a lien for storage on the mortgaged property superior to that of a prior mortgage.⁵⁸

§ 307. Mortgagee as Bona Fide Purchaser

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a mortgagee in good faith for a consideration of one in possession occupies the position of a bona fide purchaser.

Ordinarily, a mortgagee taking in good faith a mortgage from a mortgagor occupies the position, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, of a bona fide purchaser, and takes the property free from undisclosed equities of others.⁵⁹ Accordingly, it is well established that, where a sale of personal property is induced by fraud, and the fraudulent purchaser mortgages the property to one who takes without notice of the fraud, and for a present consideration, the mortgagee occupies the position of a bona fide purchaser, and will be protected against the claim of the defrauded seller to the extent of the mortgage debt.⁶⁰ The same rule has also been applied where the mortgagor obtained the property by false pretenses amounting to a felony, if the owner voluntarily parted with the possession and intended to part with the title.⁶¹ Where, however, title to the property did not pass to the mortgagor, the mortgagee does not occupy the position of a bona fide purchaser and will not be protected against the claim of the rightful owner,⁶² at least where the owner has not clothed the mortgagor with the indicia of ownership to the extent of estopping him as against a mortgagee of the one in possession.⁶³

§ 308. — Notice

A mortgagee does not occupy the position of a bona fide purchaser where, at the time of taking the mortgage, he had actual or constructive notice of the equities of others in the mortgaged property.

A mortgagee is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser where he participates in the fraud by which the mortgagor obtains the mortgaged property,⁶⁴ or where, at the time of taking the mortgage, he had knowledge or notice of the fraud,⁶⁵ or of equities existing in favor of a third person.⁶⁶ Also, he is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser where, at the time of taking the mortgage, he has notice that the mortgagor has transferred title to another, notwithstanding that the transfer might be deemed fraudulent because of the transferor's retention of possession,⁶⁷ or where he has notice that the mortgagor lacks title or right to the chattels mortgaged.⁶⁸ Actual notice is not necessary, and if the mortgagee has knowledge of such facts as would cause an ordinarily careful and prudent man to make inquiries which would lead to knowledge of the mortgagor's fraud, he is not a purchaser in good faith.⁶⁹ While the fact of notice may be inferred from circumstances, as well as

Burden

In a seller's action of replevin of goods claimed by a mortgagee of the purchaser, where it is alleged that shown by direct evidence, it has, nevertheless, been held that the proof must be such as to affect the conscience of the mortgagee, and must be so strong and clear as to fix on him the imputation of mala fides.⁷⁰ If the mortgagee took his mortgage without notice of the fraud by which the mortgagor obtained the property, a subsequent knowledge of the fraud will not deprive him of his rights as an innocent purchaser.⁷¹

Remedy pursued as affecting question of notice. Where the seller of personal property has the right to rescind the sale for fraud, and acts promptly in the exercise of such right, he need not, as against one who subsequently took a mortgage from the purchaser to secure an antecedent debt, show that such mortgagee had notice or knowledge of the fraud;⁷² but where the seller, having the right to rescind, elects not to do so, but sues in attachment for the value of the property, he thereby affirms the sale, and must show that the mortgagee had knowledge of the mortgagor's fraud in procuring the property.⁷³ If, however, such knowledge or notice on the part of the mortgagee is shown, the invalidi-

ty of the mortgage, as against the defrauded seller, will not be affected by the fact that, instead of seeking to rescind and recover the identical property, he affirms the sale by electing to sue for the value,⁷⁴ although the contrary has been held.⁷⁵

§ 309. — Preëxisting Debt as Consideration

In the absence of statute it is generally held that a mortgage given for a preëxisting debt is not on such a consideration as to place the mortgagee in the position of a bona fide purchaser for value.

Although, as already considered in § 42, a mortgage executed to secure a preëxisting debt is valid as between the parties and their privies, and, as a general rule, is not fraudulent as to creditors, as considered in the C.J.S. title Fraudulent Conveyances § 155, also 27 C.J. p 534 note 44, it, although there is authority to the contrary,⁷⁶ is not, according to the weight of authority, on such a consideration as to put the mortgagee in the position of a bona fide purchaser for value,⁷⁷ so as to entitle him to prevail over a defrauded seller seeking to rescind the sale for fraud,⁷⁸ or as against equities existing the mortgagor was a fraudulent purchaser, the burden is imposed on the mortgagee of establishing his own good faith.—Salisbury v. Barton, supra—11 C.J. p 615 note 52. Burden of proof generally see infra § 310 b.

Recorded conditional sale

Purchaser from conditional vendee was entitled to auto as against company taking mortgage from person who wrongfully filled in his own name on bill of sale left with him by conditional vendee for purchaser, since original conditional sale contract remained unsatisfied and of record when the mortgage was taken.—*Grays Harbor Finance Co. v. In Nebraska

(1) It has been held that a mortgagee in good faith is one who takes a chattel mortgage to secure a debt actually and justly owing to him, whether preëxisting or not, without actual or constructive notice of prior equities against the mortgaged property.—State Bank of Gering v. Grover, 193 N.W. 765, 110 Neb. 421—Rogers v. Trumble, 125 N.W. 600, 86 Neb. 316—State Bank of Lushton v. Kelly Co., 68 N.W. 481, 49 Neb. 242.

(2) It has also been held, however, that a mortgagee of a mortgage given to secure a preëxisting indebtedness does not occupy the position of an innocent purchaser so as to cut off the rights of a defrauded seller.—Charles P. Kellogg Co. v. Horkey, 86 N.W. 497, 61 Neb. 751—Phenix Iron Works Co. v. McEvony, 66 N.W. 290, 47 Neb. 228, 53 Am.S.R. 527—Henry v. Vliet, 54 N.W. 122, 36 Neb. 133, 19 L.R.A. 590, 49 N.W. 1107, 33 Neb. 130, 29 Am.S.R. 478—Tootle v. Chadron First Nat. Bank, 52 N.W. 396, 34 Neb. 863.

(3) In attempting to reconcile these holdings, it has been pointed out that the mortgage merely created a lien on the mortgagor's interest in the property, subject to be defeated by the seller's rescinding the sale. Accordingly, where the seller rescinded because of fraud, the title of the mortgagor failed, and there was nothing to which the mortgage could attach.—State Bank of Lushton v. Kelly Co., supra.

77. Idaho.—Livestock Credit Corporation v. Corbett, 22 P.2d 874, 53 Idaho 190.

favor of third persons,⁷⁹ such as the claim of seller for the purchase price.⁸⁰ Under the Uniform Sales Act, however, making an antecedent value where goods or documents of titles are taken as security therefor, a mortgage based on an antecedent debt constitutes the mortgagee an encumbrancer for value.⁸¹ On the other hand, if, besides securing a preëxisting debt, the mortgage is based on some new or additional consideration,⁸² such as an extension of the time of payment,⁸³ or the surrender of other securities,⁸⁴ the mortgagee will be protected. A preëxisting debt, within the meaning of the rule, is one contracted before the fraudulent sale; and a debt created after the sale, though not secured by mortgage until some time after the debt was created, is not a preëxisting debt.⁸⁵

§ 310. Actions to Determine Priorities

- a. In general
- b. Evidence

a. In General

Actions to determine priorities as to mortgaged chattels are proper subjects of equity jurisdiction, and in such actions general rules as to proceedings in equity apply.

Actions to determine priorities between mortgages, or between a mortgage and other claims, are proper subjects of equity jurisdiction.⁸⁶ Actions involving a determination of priorities are governed by usual rules as to parties,⁸⁷ pleadings,⁸⁸ issues,⁸⁹ trial,⁹⁰ including questions of law and fact.⁹¹ Fur-

Mo.—Napa Valley Wine Co. v. Rinehart, 42 Mo.App. 171.

Idaho.—Millick v. Stevens, 257 P. 30, 44 Idaho 347.

Additional sales not recorded

A mortgagee in a mortgage to secure a preëxisting debt is a mortgagee in good faith, within the meaning of a statute declaring contracts conditional sale void as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith unless recorded.—Howles Loom Works v. Vacher, 31 306, 57 N.J.Law 490, 33 L.R.A. 1.

Mortgagee of fraudulent seller

Mortgagee of personal property under mortgage securing antecedent debt had superior lien to prior purchaser of fraudulent seller.—Millick v. Stevens, 257 P. 30, 44 Idaho 347. In Missouri, in view of Rev.St. 9 § 812, making an antecedent or preëxisting debt constitute value, a mortgagee of personalty under a mortgage securing such a debt is a purchaser for value within § 1622, providing that personal property shall in no case be exempt from execution under a judgment for the purchase price "except in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value."—*Brown v. Allegations held sufficient Allegations of answer that prior mortgagee had surrendered his notes and mortgages to mortgagor, received settlement, and took a new note for balance due, but later, hearing mortgagor was insolvent, persuaded mortgagor to return the notes without consideration, were sufficient to support plea of payment.—Motor Finance Co. v. Universal Motors, La. App., 168 So. 721.

Demurrer to intervention held properly sustained and intervention properly dismissed.—Plant City Agr. Credit Co. v. Pool, 139 So. 595, 103 Fla. 806.

Litigation of priority

Chattel mortgagee, notwithstanding final foreclosure judgment, was properly, under the existing liberal system of pleading, required to litigate priority of lienholder subsequently intervening by petition invalid as intervention or review.—Hugh Cooper Co. v. American Nat. Exchange Bank of Dallas, Tex.Civ. App., 30 S.W.2d 364.

Allegation of priority

Allegation that lessor's lien was prior to lien of plaintiff's mortgage raised issue of priority and authorized introduction of evidence establishing that lessor entered into new lease, by reducing rent, subsequent to date mortgage was recorded.—Weeks Supply Co. v. Werdin, La.App., 154 So. 378.

Questions of fact in general

(1) On conflicting evidence, the question of superiority of lien is for the jury.—Blackmon v. Engram, 116 So. 307, 22 Ala.App. 396.

(2) On conflicting evidence, whether mortgagee gave permission for the creation of a prior lien is a question of fact for jury.—Robinson-Hoover Cattle Loan Co. v. Sifferman, Mo. App., 37 S.W.2d 974—Yahlem Motor Co. v. McCord, Mo.App., 299 S.W. 49.

(3) Determination of value of tenant's furniture, on conflicting evidence, in landlord's suit for destruction of lien by holder of mortgage on ther, the relief prayed for is also governed by the usual rules.⁹²

b. Evidence

General rules apply as to the burden of proof, the admissibility, and the weight and sufficiency, of the evidence.

Burden of proof and presumptions. Ordinarily, in an action or proceeding involving the priority of liens on mortgaged chattels, plaintiff has the burden of proving that he has a lien⁹³ superior to the rights of others,⁹⁴ and claimants asserting a prior lien to the property have the burden of proving their right thereto.⁹⁵ The burden of proving notice seems to rest on the attacking party,⁹⁶ but where a subsequent encumbrancer attempts to enforce his lien, it is necessary to show that he took without knowledge of the prior encumbrance.⁹⁷ Under some statutes, one claiming priority as a bona fide purchaser, as against a defectively executed or recorded mortgage, has the burden of proving such fact,⁹⁸ but where under the recording statute an unrecorded mortgage is void as to bona fide purchasers, the mortgagee of an unrecorded or furniture was for jury.—Gay v. Radney, 142 So. 828, 225 Ala. 331.

Questions of notice held for jury

Tex.—Lindig v. Johnson City State Bank, Com.App., 41 S.W.2d 222, reversing Johnson City State Bank v. Lindig, Civ.App., 26 S.W.2d 658.

Unrecorded conditional sale

Whether seller of unrecorded conditional sale repossessed chattel in compliance with statute, so as to gain superiority over mortgage thereon was held to be a question for the jury.—McNeill v. Motor Sales Co., 94 So. 365, 208 Ala. 310.

92. S.C.—Pearce-Young-Angel Co. v. Murrah, 174 S.E. 21, 172 S.C. 348. Utah.—Hansen v. Daniels, 272 P. 941, 73 Utah 142.

11 C.J. p 662 note 19.

Apportionment of labor lien

The amount of a mill laborer's lien against lumber covered by a mortgage may be determined between the mortgagee and the mortgagor's receiver by apportioning to that lumber the usual cost of labor in that mill for producing an equal quantity.—Security Trust Co. v. Bank of Bernice, La., 239 F. 665, 152 C.C.A. 499.

Ascertainment of true equities

Where buyer of truck and trailer had executed mortgage thereon and such mortgage was recorded, and buyer acquired property, giving seller a conditional sales contract and mortgage, then the court would go back of the date of the respective instruments and their recording and ascertain the true equities, since mortgage to creditor would be merely equitable.—Valley Chevrolet Co. v. O. S. Stapley Co., Ariz., 72 P.2d 945.

Recognition of lien

Holder of note and mortgage on automobile was entitled to recognition of lien and privilege on automobile as against mortgagor, notwithstanding holder was guilty of laches in enforcement of mortgage, where mortgagor failed to defend suit on note.—Black v. O. K. Radiator & Sheet Metal Works, La.App., 152 So. 782.

Consideration

As respects priorities, mortgagee need not prove specific consideration for chattel mortgage securing negotiable note.—Lone Star Finance Corporation v. Fulbright, Tex.Civ.App., 61 S.W.2d 562.

Execution

Mortgagee was required to show mortgages were executed by debtor personally.—National Cash Register Co. v. Clyde W. Riley Advertising System, 160 N.E. 545, 329 Ill. 403.

94. Iowa.—Meredith v. Beadle, 233 N.W. 512, 211 Iowa 390.

Wash.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lewis Realty & Investment Corporation, 23 P.2d 572, 173 Wash. 444.

Compliance with statutes

That mortgage may be established as prior lien as against judgment creditors, holder must prove technical compliance with statute.—National Cash Register Co. v. Clyde W. Riley Advertising System, 160 N.E. 545, 329 Ill. 403.

Mortgage creditor of tenant, who became such creditor before tenant assumed actual relation of tenant, is exception to general rule as to landlord's right of distress, and he must prove exception, declared by Civ.Code 1912 § 3516.—Morgan Silver Plate Co. v. Bobo Undertaking Co., 92 S.E. 720, 107 S.C. 280.

95. La.—Weaks Supply Co. v. Werdin, App., 154 So. 378.

N.C.—Rogers v. Ray, 155 S.E. 253, 199 N.C. 577.

Matters required to be proved

(1) Lack of consideration for mortgage, notwithstanding that it is a negative allegation.—First Nat. Bank v. Todd, Tex.Com.App., 231 S.W. 322, reversing, Civ.App., 212 S.W. 219.

(2) Cancellation of mortgage.—Bensen & Marxer v. Reger, 168 N.W. 881, 186 Iowa 19, modified on other grounds Benson & Marxer v. Reger, 172 N.W. 166, 186 Iowa 19.

(3) That mortgage was not properly on file when claimant purchased property.—Shackelford v. Clements, Tex.Civ.App., 300 S.W. 98.

(4) That lessor's privilege primed mortgage.—Weaks Supply Co. v. Werdin, La.App., 154 So. 378.—Remington-Rand, Inc., v. mely recorded mortgage, to secure priority over subsequent purchaser, must prove that the purchaser had actual knowledge of his mortgage at time of purchase.⁹⁹

Also, one claiming an agreement or waiver by which his lien is given preference has the burden of proof;¹ and the courts will not indulge in a pretension that an agreement existed between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the mortgage should give way to another lien, but such an agreement must be shown by clear and cogent evidence.² Where the removal of a crop from the land constitutes a prima facie extinguishment of the lien of a mortgage thereon, the burden is on the mortgagee to rebut the presumption by showing that the removal was tortious.³

Admissibility. General rules govern the admissibility of evidence.⁴

XII. ASSIGNMENT OF MORTGAGE OR DEBT

§ 311. Right to Assign

A mortgagee may assign his interests under a mortgage at any time before the right of redemption is barred.

A mortgagee may dispose of his interests under the mortgage by assignment⁹ at least at any time before the right of redemption is barred.¹⁰ Of course, an assignment ordinarily transfers no interest where at the time of the assignment the mortgagee has no assignable interest.¹¹ Moreover, an assignment of the mortgage security after payment or satisfaction of the mortgage debt is a nullity.¹² However, it has been held that, although a mortgage may for some reason be void as between the original parties, an assignment thereof confers on the assignee a nominal legal title to the property.¹³ The fact that an assignment before maturity is made a criminal offense by statute has been held not to affect the title of an innocent assignee for value of a mortgage so assigned.¹⁴

A mortgage may be transferred merely as collateral security,¹⁵ in which case the mortgagee may subsequently assign his remaining interest under the mortgage to another.¹⁶

Where the mortgagee disposes of the mortgage for an amount in excess of that due him under the mortgage from the mortgagor, he is under no duty to account to the latter for such excess.¹⁷

§ 312. Requisites and Validity in General

In the absence of a statute prescribing the mode of assignment, no particular form is necessary for an assignment of a mortgage, although in order to pass legal title to the property, in jurisdictions where a mortgage passes title, the assignment must be so executed as to be sufficient to convey the property itself.

In the absence of statutory provision prescribing the mode of assignment, no particular form is necessary, generally speaking, to effect a valid assignment of a mortgage.¹⁸ However, for purposes of passing legal title to the mortgaged property to the assignee, an assignment of the mortgage must be in such form and so executed as to be sufficient to convey the legal title to the property itself,¹⁹ statutes governing transfers of personalty being applicable to assignments of mortgages as regards the transfer of legal title to the mortgaged property.²⁰

An intention to vest the mortgagee's interest in the assignee is, of course, necessary to the validity of an assignment.²¹ Thus a transaction is not an assignment unless the assent to the transfer of the mortgagee's interest be mutual²² and voluntary.²³

An assignment may be effected without a writing of any kind,²⁴ and it may be effected by an assignment of the debt and an actual manual transfer of the mortgage.²⁵ A mortgage may be legally assigned by an indorsement thereon,²⁶ which may be a blank indorsement.²⁷ Further, a mortgage may be legally assigned by a separate writing,²⁸ and such a writing accompanied by delivery of the note and mortgage is at least sufficient to convey equitable title, in a jurisdiction in which a mortgagee acquires title.²⁹ The fact that the assignee's name is not set forth in the writing is immaterial if the transaction was otherwise sufficient to constitute an assignment, since the assignee has implied authority to write in his name.³⁰

In the absence of a statute requiring assignments to be proved or registered, the signature of a mortgagee, assigning the mortgage by assignment thereon, may be proved as if written on a separate piece of paper.³¹

A seal is not essential to the validity of an assignment of a chattel mortgage.³²

Acknowledgment is necessary only to entitle the assignment to record.³³

Consideration. While a sufficient consideration is necessary to a valid assignment of a mortgage,³⁴ yet the absence of a consideration, or of a sufficient consideration, is in general no concern of the mortgagor, and will not avail him or a junior mortgagee,³⁵ nor will it affect the rights of the assignee against creditors of the mortgagor.³⁶

§ 313. Filing or Recording Assignment

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is generally held that the recordation of the assignment is not necessary in order to protect the rights of the assignee.

It is the rule in most jurisdictions that the filing or recording of an assignment of a mortgage is not necessary, in the absence of a statute requiring it in express terms or by necessary implication, in order to protect the rights of the assignee,³⁷ even as against subsequent purchasers without notice;³⁸ and statutory requirements relative to the filing of mortgages have been held not to apply to assignments of such instruments.³⁹ Under some statutes, however, an assignment of a mortgage is entitled to record,⁴⁰ and in some jurisdictions, even though the statute does not expressly provide for the recordation of an assignment of a mortgage, it is held that an unrecorded assignment will be avoided in favor of subsequent purchasers and existing creditors without notice.⁴¹ In other jurisdictions, where the statutes provide for the recordation of

In New York

(1) An unrecorded assignment has been held to be void as against innocent purchasers for value, under a statute providing for the recordation of mortgages or conveyances intended to operate as an assignment of goods and chattels. Thus, a purchaser of mortgaged property on the mortgagor's default has been held to acquire good title to the property as against an assignee of one of a duplicate set of mortgages and notes, where the purchaser had no notice of the assignment and the assignor had executed a satisfaction of the other set and delivered it to the purchaser of the property. Also, an unrecorded assignment has been said to be void as against a subsequent purchaser of the mortgage.—Fahlbusch v. Consumers Discount Corporation, 288 N.Y.S. 511, 159 Misc. 568.

(2) However, recordation of an assignment was held to be unnecessary where the statute provided merely for the recording of the mortgage itself.—Haskins v. Kelly, 24 N.Y. Super. 160, 1 Abb.Pr., N.S., 63.

(3) In the case of a transfer of the mortgage merely by way of collateral security for the payment of a debt, recordation has been held unnecessary on the ground that the statute extends only to mortgages of goods and chattels, not to mortgages of choses in action.—Haskins v. Kelly, supra.

Generally the transfer of a note or debt secured by a mortgage operates in equity as a transfer of the security as well.

Unless the mortgagee has previously parted with his interest under the mortgage,⁴⁷ a transfer of the mortgage notes or of the mortgage debt will operate as an equitable assignment of the security as well, in the absence of an express agreement or statute to the contrary.⁴⁸ The rule has been held to apply with equal force although the assignment

Reason for rule

(1) A chattel mortgage is a mere incident of the debt which it secures, and an assignment of such indebtedness carries with it an interest in the mortgage.—Beatrice Creamery Co. v. Golden, 263 P. 458, 129 Okl. 86.

(2) Other statements see 11 C.J. p 664 note 62 [a].

An assignee of a mortgage taken in satisfaction of a judgment based on a prior second mortgage note succeeds to no rights under such second mortgage.—Gould & Co. v. Mt. Baker Savings & Loan Ass'n, 53 P.2d 841, 185 Wash. 253.

Mortgage on after-acquired property

The transfer of a note secured by a mortgage on crops to be sown and harvested has been held to carry with it the mortgage on the crop.—Purdie v. Lekve, 230 N.W. 266, 180 Minn. 81.

In Louisiana

(1) The transfer of a note or debt carries with it every accessory thereto.—Riley v. Washington, App., 161 So. 896.

(2) Thus a transfer of the debt carries with it a chattel mortgage securing such debt.—Gresham v. Graves, 3 La.App. 153.

(3) So also it carries with it a vendor's lien of the mortgagee, entitling the transferee of the debt to pursue the property wherever the vendor could follow it.—Riley v. Washington, supra.

not made until after maturity of the claim,⁴⁹ or until after the mortgagee has made a demand on the mortgagor for possession of the property.⁵⁰ Whatever interest will pass by a general or full indorsement may, it seems, pass by a qualified indorsement of the mortgage note.⁵¹ The fact that the mortgage is never delivered to the mortgagee has been held not to prevent the security from following the bill.⁵² So also statutory requirements as to the form of assignments of choses in action have been held to be inapplicable to a transfer of security effected by a transfer of the debt, since such a transfer is effected, not by an act of the parties, but by the operation of a doctrine of equity.⁵³ However, while a transfer of the security will be effected as between the immediate parties and subsequent purchasers with notice, it has been held that it will not be effective as against subsequent purchasers without notice.⁵⁴ Moreover, although an assignment of the debt ordinarily carries with it the lien of the mortgage, it is generally held that it does not convey to the assignee legal title to the mortgaged property.⁵⁵ On the contrary, unless the mortgage itself is assigned, or the legal title is in some other manner conveyed, it is generally held that the legal title remains in the mortgagee as trustee for the holder of the debt thus secured.⁵⁶ However, there is authority holding, under a statute vesting legal title in the mortgaged chattels in the mortgagee, that a transfer of a secured note does convey to the transferee the legal title to the mortgaged chattels.⁵⁷

If the transferor of the debt expressly assumes absolute liability thereon, he may, by an express agreement with the transferee, retain the interest in the mortgage in himself.⁵⁸

Under a statute providing that a mortgage becomes absolutely void on a transfer of the secured note where the note fails to state on its face that it is secured by the mortgage, where the mortgage has become void under such statute, subsequent conduct of the parties will be ineffective to revive it.⁵⁹

§ 315. — Part of Claim

A transfer of a portion of a mortgage debt carries with it, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, a pro tanto equitable interest in the security.

Not only will the transfer of an entire secured debt operate as an equitable assignment of the security, as discussed in the preceding section, but a transfer of one of several notes or of a distinct part of the indebtedness secured by a mortgage will carry with it a pro tanto equitable interest in the mortgage security, in the absence of any stipulation or agreement to the contrary.⁶⁰ However, such a transfer will not carry with it a right to the possession of the mortgaged property by the assignee to the exclusion of the mortgagee.⁶¹ Where the terms of the assignment are silent as to priority, the assignee's debt will ordinarily be given preference as a claim on the property over that retained by the mortgagee, but by stipulating therefor, the assignee may be postponed to the mortgagee.⁶² The assignee, by claiming under the mortgage, is estopped to impeach the mortgagee's debt.⁶³

Where notes or distinct portions of a debt secured by a mortgage are assigned to several different persons, each assignee is entitled to a pro rata share in the proceeds of the security, in the absence of an agreement to other effect, irrespective of the order of the assignments or of the date of maturity of the notes or the portions of the debt.⁶⁴ On the other hand, the mortgagee may give priority to a particular assignee, and such priority need not be explicitly given, but may be inferred from the circumstances surrounding the transfer.⁶⁵

Where priority has been accorded to the holder of one of several notes or a portion of the debt, such person must, nevertheless, act fairly and in good faith toward the holders of other notes or portions of the debt secured by the mortgage.⁶⁶ If

66. Failure to foreclose

An assignee of the note first due cannot be divested of his priority by the person having priority also has legal title to the entire mortgage, he holds the mortgage, although primarily for his own benefit, secondarily for the benefit of persons holding other notes or portions of the debt secured by the mortgage.⁶⁷ If the possession or the right to possession of the property is in such person, he must use care to prevent the destruction and spoliation of the property.⁶⁸ However, it has been held that he is not a trustee save as to collections in excess of his debt.⁶⁹

§ 316. Transfer of Mortgage Alone

A transfer of a mortgage without an assignment of the debt secured thereby passes no right to the assignee.

Unless an assignment of a mortgage is accompanied by an assignment of the debt secured thereby no right passes to the assignee,⁷⁰ but where the debt secured is evidenced by no instrument other than the mortgage, an assignment of the mortgage has been held to be an assignment of the debt as well.⁷¹ It has been held, however, that an assignment of the mortgage note is not essential if it was the intention of the parties to transfer the debt.⁷²

A transfer of a mortgage and a part of the secured claim as collateral security does not result in a loss of the mortgagee's interest under the mortgage for the portion of the claim not transferred.⁷³

Inasmuch as a mortgage presupposes the existence of a debt, as shown supra in § 37, the transfer of a purported mortgage not securing a debt passes no interest to the transferee.⁷⁴

§ 317. Assignment to Mortgagor or Owner of Property

An intention to assign is necessary in order to pass the mortgagee's interest to the owner of the mortgaged property. A transfer of the mortgage to one of several mortgagors for a consideration flowing from a stranger operates as an assignment of the mortgage to such mortgagor.

As in the case of all assignments, an intention to assign is necessary in order that a transaction constitute an assignment of the mortgagee's interest to the owner of the mortgaged chattels.⁷⁵ Accordingly, at least in so far as the rights of junior lienholders are concerned, the mere fact that the owner of the mortgaged chattels pays the mortgage debt, or causes it to be paid, will not result in an assignment of the mortgage to him.⁷⁶ So also it has been held that, where the owner of property has taken the property with notice of a reservation of an interest therein by the vendor, he cannot keep alive a mortgage executed by the vendor on such interest by purchasing the note secured by the mortgage.⁷⁷

However, a transfer of a mortgage to the mortgagor will ordinarily operate, as shown infra § 344, as a merger of interests and an extinguishment of the mortgage; but a transfer of the mortgage to one of several mortgagors for a valuable consideration flowing from a stranger has been held to op-failure to commence his action to foreclose before maturity of the second note.—Lyman v. Smith, 21 Wis. 674.

If assignee having priority sells the mortgaged property he must either give other persons having an interest under the mortgage notice of the sale, or, failing to give such notice, obtain a fair price for the property sold, and if he fails to perform his duty in this regard, will be liable to such persons for the fair value of the property.—*Abrams v. Indorsement of mortgage notes by the assignor of the mortgage is necessary in order to transfer any rights under the mortgage to the assignee thereof, and legal title to note secured by the mortgage must be transferred to the assignee of the latter in order that he be entitled to maintain an action of replevin.—Elvin v. Wuchetich, 157 N.E. 243, 326 Ill. 285.

Signed copy of note

The mere fact that a signed copy of the note is embodied in the mortgage does not transfer any interest to the assignee of the mortgage.—Business Men's Finance Ass'n v. Rolsin, 161 N.E. 646, 88 Ind.App. 109.

ate as an assignment of the mortgagee's interest in the mortgagor.⁷⁸

318. Evidence as to Assignment

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, an assignment of the mortgage by the mortgagee will not be presumed.

In the absence of proof to the contrary, it is presumed that the rights secured by a mortgagee under a chattel mortgage are still in him,⁷⁹ and the mere fact that payments on the mortgage debt were made by a third person does not establish an assignment by such person.⁸⁰ In various cases, however, the evidence has been held to be sufficient to show a transfer of the mortgage.⁸¹

319. Rights Acquired by Assignee in General

The assignee of a mortgage and the secured debt generally acquires all the rights and powers possessed by the mortgagee, including the latter's interest in, and right of possession of, the mortgaged property; but he does not ordinarily acquire any greater rights than the mortgagee had, or rights personal to the mortgagee.

An assignment of a mortgage and the debt which it secures will generally invest the assignee with all the rights and powers which were possessed by the mortgagee,⁸² which are not personal to him,⁸³ and the assignee stands in the same position as to the mortgagor,⁸⁴ or a donee from the mortgagor,⁸⁵ as did the mortgagee, and the same rights and obligations exist between them. The assignment prima facie transfers the mortgagee's interest in the mortgaged property,⁸⁶ and this is true although the transfer is only as collateral security.⁸⁷ Moreover, a right of estoppel existing in connection with the mortgage in favor of the mortgagee has been held to pass to the assignee by an assignment of the mortgage.⁸⁸ The mere fact that the assignee claims another lien on the same property does not prevent his acquiring the mortgagee's interest in the property.⁸⁹

The assignee, however, cannot in general claim any greater rights or take any better title than the mortgagee⁹⁰ or an intermediate assignor⁹¹ had. Thus he cannot hold the mortgaged property as se-

Equitable title

If the assignor has only an equita-curity for a debt not intended by the original parties to the mortgage to be secured thereby,⁹² or for a debt which, although contemplated, never came into existence.⁹³

After an assignment, the rights acquired by the assignee will not, generally speaking, be prejudiced by acts of the mortgagee not authorized or ratified by the assignee.⁹⁴

Right of assignee to possession. The assignee of a mortgage and the note secured thereby is ordinarily entitled to the possession of the mortgaged chattels as soon as the original mortgagee would have been entitled to their possession,⁹⁵ and can exercise in his own behalf the rights conferred on the mortgagee by an insecurity clause in the mortgage.⁹⁶ However, if the right of seizure has been waived by the mortgagee, it is not available to a subsequent assignee.⁹⁷ Moreover, it has been held that an assignee is not entitled to the possession of mortgaged property which the mortgagee permitted to remain in the hands of a levying officer at the time of assigning the mortgage.⁹⁸ If the mortgagee assigns only a part of his interest, neither the assignee nor the mortgagee is entitled to the exclusive possession of the mortgaged property,⁹⁹ and if the mortgagee is in possession in such circumstances the assignee cannot maintain an action against him for possession.¹

Possession must be acquired by the assignee in a legal manner, and, although the assignee may be entitled in particular circumstances to possession, he cannot retain possession acquired in an illegal manner.²

Rights of mortgagee after assignment. The assignment of the mortgage before maturity by delivery and indorsement of the mortgage and note as collateral security for a loan not yet due vests in the assignee only the equitable title,³ and the mortgagee does not lose his interest in the mortgage.⁴ Accordingly he is entitled to any surplus realized from a sale of the property by the assignee;⁵ or, if the transfer is a mere pledge, may himself enforce his lien by a sale of the mortgaged property, subject to the interest of the pledgee.⁶

Reimbursement on paying prior lien. Where the assignee pays off a prior lien he is entitled to be reimbursed, even though the mortgage is held to be invalid as to creditors for want of proper registration.⁷

§ 320. Implied Warranties

An assignor of a mortgage, even though the assignment is without recourse, impliedly warrants that the mortgage is genuine and what it purports to be.

ble title to mortgaged property, the assignee will acquire only an equitable title thereto.—Albertville Trading Co. v. Brooks, 113 So. 473, 22 Ala. App. 147.

92. Mortgagor's debt to assignee

(1) The assignee cannot hold the mortgaged property as security for a debt of the mortgagor to the assignee where such debt was not within the contemplation of the original parties at the time of the execution of the mortgage and no provision was made therein for the securing of such debt.—Tankersley v. Gibbs, 46 S.W.2d 802, 185 Ark. 201.

(2) The fact that a mortgage purports to be security for any present or future indebtedness of the mortgagor to the mortgagee does not make it security for a debt of the mortgagor to an assignee of the mortgagee's interests under the mortgage.—National Finance Co. v. Fregia, Tex.Civ.App., 78 S.W.2d 1081.

In the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the rule that the transfer, without recourse, of a note warrants by implication that the note transferred is genuine and not forged or fictitious,⁸ and that it is what it purports to be,⁹ has been held to apply to the assignment of a mortgage. However, an assignment of all the mortgagee's interest in the mortgage and everything therein contained has been held to exclude any implied warranty of the mortgagee's title to the mortgaged property.¹⁰ Moreover, it has been held that the assignor is not liable to the assignee for the amount of an undisclosed claim discharged by the assignee after the assignment, in the absence of an express assumption of liability therefor by the assignor.¹¹

§ 321. Payment or Discharge of Mortgage

a. In general

b. Payment to, and release by, mortgagee after assignment

a. In General

In the absence of an agreement or understanding to the contrary, one buying a mortgage for less than its face value is entitled to recover the whole amount due.

In the absence of an agreement or understanding to other effect,¹² it has been held that one buying a mortgage for less than its face value is entitled to recover the whole amount due.¹³ On the other hand, where an assignment is taken with the intention of holding the mortgage only for the amount of the consideration given, the mortgage may be discharged by paying to the assignee the consideration which he gave, with interest.¹⁴ If a mortgage was transferred merely as collateral security, payment of the amount of the debt to secure which the mortgage was transferred will discharge the transferee's lien on the mortgage.¹⁵

Whether a transaction involving a payment to the creditor by a third person constitutes an assignment of the debt and mortgage to such person or a discharge of the debt and mortgage is determined largely by the intention of the parties.¹⁶

Application of proceeds. Where the mortgaged property has been received by the mortgagee to apply the proceeds on the debt, one who obtains possession of the property with notice of the agreement and takes an assignment of the debt and mortgage must apply the proceeds to discharge the debt secured by that mortgage, and the fact that such person holds a junior mortgage on the property will not entitle him to apply the proceeds on some other debt before discharging the debt secured by the senior mortgage.¹⁷

Right to assignment on payment. A third person having an interest in the mortgaged property is ordinarily entitled to an assignment of the mortgage upon tendering the amount due thereon to the mortgagee.¹⁸ Accordingly, a judgment creditor who levies on mortgaged chattels is entitled to an assignment of the mortgage on tendering a sufficient amount to the mortgagee,¹⁹ except where part of the chattels covered by the mortgage is exempt from execution.²⁰

Caminsky, 176 N.W. 794, 188 Iowa 901.

Satisfaction from proceeds

The act of a third person in taking possession of the mortgaged property and satisfying the mortgage indebtedness with the proceeds thereof has been held not to constitute an assignment, but a payment, of the mortgage.—Haynes v. Gwin, 209 S.W. 67, 137 Ark. 387.

b. Payment to, and Release by, Mortgagee after Assignment

After the assignment of a negotiable note secured by a mortgage, payment to the mortgagee, unless authorized or ratified by the assignee, will not bind the assignee. After an assignment, a release of the mortgage by the mortgagee will, generally speaking, be ineffective.

After the assignment of a negotiable note secured by a mortgage, the mortgagee has no right to receive payment of the debt, the assignee alone being entitled thereto, and payment to the mortgagee will not ordinarily discharge the debt and mortgage in the hands of the assignee,²¹ unless the assignee has authorized²² or ratified²³ such payment. Moreover, this has been held to be the law even when the one paying the debt does so without notice of the assignment.²⁴ If the mortgage secures a nonnegotiable debt, however, a payment of the debt to the mortgagee after the assignment, and in ignorance of such assignment, will discharge the mortgage.²⁵

Discharge or release by mortgagee after assignment. A mortgagee cannot, generally speaking, release the mortgage after making an assignment thereof.²⁶ A release by him in such case has been held to be void;²⁷ and it is generally held that the mortgagee cannot prejudice the rights of the assignee as against even subsequent bona fide purchasers and mortgagees by releasing or entering satisfaction of the mortgage.²⁸ A fortiori, after an assignment of the mortgage, the mortgagee cannot prejudice the interest acquired by the assignee by statements that the mortgage has been satisfied.²⁹ In order to set up a release after an assignment as a defense, no rights of third parties having intervened, the mortgagor must first pay off the mortgage debt.³⁰

§ 322. Equities and Defenses between Original Parties

In most jurisdictions a bona fide assignee of a negotiable mortgage note for value before maturity is generally held to take the mortgaged property free from equities and defenses between the original parties. An assignee not a bona fide purchaser, or an assignee of a nonnegotiable debt, takes subject to all such equities or defenses.

Although a mortgage is not negotiable in the sense of the commercial law,³¹ the rule as laid down in most jurisdictions is that a bona fide assignee of a negotiable mortgage note, before maturity, and for value, will take the mortgaged property free from equities and defenses existing between the original parties to the mortgage,³² at least where the equities are secret or latent;³³ and it would seem that this rule obtains although the assignee takes the secured note as collateral security.³⁴ Moreover, if the assignor is a bona fide holder, the assignee will take free from equities or defenses not affecting the assignor, even though the assignee takes after maturity and with knowledge of such defenses or equities.³⁵ On the other hand, in a few jurisdictions, it is held that the rights of a bona fide transferee are governed by principles applicable to nonnegotiable instruments, and that, so far as the mortgaged property is concerned, such a transferee takes subject to equities and defenses existing between the original parties.³⁶

An assignee who does not stand in the position of a bona fide purchaser will, of course, take subject to all equities and defenses between the original parties,³⁷ as where he takes with notice of such equities or defenses,³⁸ where the note secured by the mortgage has not been properly transferred,³⁹ or where the note is overdue at the time it is assigned.⁴⁰ Moreover, where the debt secured by the mortgage is nonnegotiable, the assignee takes subject to all equities between the original parties.⁴¹

Payment of the debt to the mortgagee after an assignment as a defense against the assignee is discussed supra § 321.

Assignment pendente lite. After the institution of a foreclosure suit an assignee takes a mortgage subject to all the equities and infirmities which can attach to it by reason of the final decree in such suit, but he is not bound by a collateral proceeding unless he has notice of it and is given an opportunity to be heard.⁴²

Estoppel to assert defense. Where a gratuitous mortgage is given for the purpose of being sold, it has been held that the mortgagor will be estopped to assert against the assignee of the mortgage that it was not given to secure a real debt.⁴³

§ 323. Equities in Favor of Third Persons

A bona fide assignee of a mortgage is generally held to take it free from equities of third persons of which he had no notice.

Mich.—Judge v. Vogel, 38 Mich. 569.

It is a general rule that the bona fide assignee of a mortgage takes it free from latent or secret equities in favor of third persons of which he had no notice or knowledge.⁴⁴ Thus, it has been held that a bona fide assignee without notice will take the mortgage free from the claims of creditors of the mortgagor who had previously levied on the mortgaged property,⁴⁵ or of creditors claiming a prior lien or mortgage thereon.⁴⁶ Likewise, it has been held that such an assignee will take free from claims of creditors asserting that the mortgage was fraudulent as to them,⁴⁷ but the contrary has been held where the creditors have taken sufficient steps to set aside the mortgage.⁴⁸ So also, a mortgage given to indemnify a surety has been held to pass by assignment free from claims of the principal creditor of which the assignee had no notice.⁴⁹

On the other hand, where the assignee does not stand in the position of a bona fide holder, he takes the mortgage subject to the equities of third persons.⁵⁰ Where the mortgage is not an operative legal instrument at the time the mortgaged property is purchased by a third person, one subsequently taking an assignment of the mortgage for value and without notice acquires no rights as against the purchaser.⁵¹

(1) It has generally been held that an assignee will take subject to such equities of third persons as would have prevailed against the assignor.—Kommel v. Herb-Gner Const. Co., 176 N.E. 413, 256 N.Y. 333, reversing 239 N.Y.S. 148, 228 App.Div. 96.—Fahlbusch v. Consumers Discount Corporation, 288 N.Y.S. 511, 159 Misc. 568—11 C.J. p 669 note 31 [b] (1), (2).

(2) Thus the assignee will take subject to secret and latent equities of which the assignor had notice.—Kommel v. Herb-Gner Const. Co., 239 N.Y.S. 148, 228 App.Div. 96, reversed on other grounds 176 N.E. 413, 256 N.Y. 333.—*New York Title & Mortgage Co. v. (3) However, under a statute providing that a purchaser of chattels will take free of a conditional sales contract of which he has no notice, it has been held that an assignee will take free of such a contract if he has no notice thereof and stands in the position of a purchaser of the property.—*Kommel v. Assignee after maturity

(1) If the assignment is not until after maturity, the assignee takes subject to equities of third persons.—Palmer v. Cochrane Brokerage Co., 217 P. 1007, 126 Wash. 169—11 C.J. p 670 note 38.

(2) The rule that the assignee of a mortgage securing paper that is overdue takes subject to equities between the original parties, however, has been held not to apply to latent equities of third persons.—Gibson v. McIntire, 81 N.W. 699, 110 Iowa 417.

Mortgage note nonnegotiable

Where the mortgage note assigned is nonnegotiable the assignee takes subject to the same defenses in favor of a third person as such person would have against the mortgagee.—City Nat. Bank v. Gunter, 72 P. 842, 67 Kan. 227—11 C.J. p 670 note 42.

Want of indorsement

If the debt is in the form of a negotiable note, and the assignee takes no indorsement thereof, he takes only an equitable interest, which is subject to existing equities of third persons.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

Unrecorded mortgage. An assignee of an unrecorded mortgage has been held to take subject to the rights of judgment creditors who have reduced the property to possession.⁵²

Right as against mortgagee. Although a purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property from a mortgagee could have prevented a sale by the latter's assignee, and failed so to do, he may nevertheless recover damages from the mortgagee for transferring the mortgage in violation of a guaranty.⁵³

After an assignment, the rights acquired by the assignee will not be affected by a sale or mortgage of the property to a person having notice of the mortgage lien,⁵⁴ unless the assignee authorized the transaction,⁵⁵ or is otherwise estopped to assert his rights.⁵⁶

§ 324. Actions by Assignees

- a. Right of action and defenses
- b. Parties
- c. Pleading, evidence, trial, and damages

a. Right of Action and Defenses

After a mortgage has been assigned, the assignee, not the mortgagee, is ordinarily entitled to maintain actions based on the mortgage, such as an action for conversion or possession of the mortgaged property or for destruction of the mortgage lien. In case of fraud in the assignment, the assignee may rescind the assignment.

After a mortgagee has assigned the mortgage, he cannot maintain an action for conversion of the property,⁵⁷ or sue in his own right to recover possession thereof.⁵⁸ The right of action for conversion,⁵⁹ for trespass against one wrongfully taking the property,⁶⁰ or for possession of the property⁶¹ is thereafter in the assignee, unless the assignee assents to the mortgagee bringing the suit,⁶² or unless, at the time the mortgage note is transferred, the mortgage is retained by the mortgagee under an agreement that the assignee of the note shall have nothing to do with it.⁶³ However, where a part of the debt secured by a mortgage is assigned as collateral security for an indebtedness of the mortgagee to the assignee and the assignee appropriates sufficient of the mortgaged property before the mortgage becomes due to satisfy his debt, his title is extinguished and he cannot maintain trover against one who levies on a part of the mortgaged property by virtue of executions against the mortgagor.⁶⁴

The assignee need not maintain an action on the debt before resorting to the mortgage.⁶⁵ He may, it seems, bring an action in tort, or for money had and received, against one who converts the mortgaged property.⁶⁶ Although there is authority to the contrary,⁶⁷ it is generally held that, in order to give the assignee a right of action for conversion of the mortgaged property, the conversion must have taken place after the assignment, since the assignment will not transfer such a right of action;⁶⁸ nor will the assignment of a mortgage and the note

Statute not affecting rule

A statute in California referring secured thereby transfer to the assignee a right of action which the mortgagee may have had against the sheriff for the return of the property.⁶⁹

Where a statute declares that a mortgagee is not entitled to possession unless the mortgage so provides, or unless he takes possession at the time the mortgage is executed, an assignee of the mortgage cannot maintain replevin against a purchaser of the property from the mortgagor, where the mortgagee left such property in the mortgagor's possession, but can only bring an action to foreclose the mortgage.⁷⁰

Where the property has been put beyond the reach of the mortgagee, the assignee may maintain an action on the case for the destruction of the lien of the mortgage,⁷¹ but a mere conversion of the property will not support such an action.⁷² An assignee has been held to have no right of action of debt against a purchaser of the mortgaged property, although the purchaser has assumed the mortgage debt.⁷³ Where the transferee of a part of the mortgage debt acquires a second mortgage on the same property, he may, in the same bill, compel an accounting by the first mortgagee, and enforce his entire claim, including his rights under the second mortgage.⁷⁴

Where the mortgagee has knowingly misrepresented a material fact, in order to induce the assignee to purchase the mortgage, the assignee may rescind the transaction upon promptly offering restoration after discovering the fraud.⁷⁵

Defenses. Defendant may set up any defense he may have to an action by an assignee of a mortgage.⁷⁶ The fact that the assignment was not made until after the maturity of the note transferred and after a demand for the property had been made by the mortgagee is not a defense to an action of replevin;⁷⁷ nor is the fact that the assignee permitted the mortgagee to reduce the note to judgment a defense where the assignee had purchased all of the mortgagee's assets and owned them at the time of the trial.⁷⁸ The mortgagor cannot defend by setting up a prior mortgage on the same property, as that implies a breach of his warranty to the mortgagee,⁷⁹ and a subsequent agreement whereby the assignee waived particular terms of the mortgage will not prevent him from replevying the property in accordance with the original terms of the mortgage where the mortgagor failed to comply with the agreement.⁸⁰ The fact that the assignee sold the mortgaged property pending the action,⁸¹ or that he reassigned the secured note after crediting the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property,⁸² will not bar an action of replevin by him.

b. Parties

An assignee of a mortgage is generally held to have the right to bring an action in his own name for the recovery of damages for injury to, or for the possession of, the mortgaged property. The mortgagor is a necessary party to actions adversely affecting his interests.

After a mortgagor has forfeited his right to possession of the mortgaged chattels, an assignee of the mortgage has a general right to maintain in his own name an action of trover to recover damages for a wrongful conversion of the property;⁸³ and under similar circumstances he may maintain in his own name an action of detinue,⁸⁴ replevin,⁸⁵ or claim to rights which inure to benefit of a transferee of a mortgage does not contemplate that assignee of a mortgage thereby succeeds to right of action for tortious acts committed by way of conversion against mortgaged property prior to time assignee acquired interest by way of lien in mortgaged property.—*Millner v. and delivery,⁸⁶ even before maturity of the debt,⁸⁷ or he may sue in his own name in trespass to recover for an injury to the property caused by a third person.⁸⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, where the assignee acquires merely an equitable title to the mortgaged property, or where the assignment is insufficient to convey legal title, he cannot maintain, in his own name, an action at law for the conversion thereof,⁸⁹ nor sue in his own name to recover possession,⁹⁰ but he may maintain an action on the case in his own name,⁹¹ or he may bring trover⁹² or an action of detinue or replevin⁹³ in the name of the mortgagee. However, in other jurisdictions it is held that the equitable title of an assignee is sufficient to maintain an action in his own name against a stranger who takes possession of the mortgaged property,⁹⁴ or to maintain replevin for the recovery of possession,⁹⁵ even though the note was indorsed merely for collection.⁹⁶

Joinder and intervention. The mortgagor is a necessary party to an action in which his rights are adjudicated.⁹⁷ Replevin to recover possession of mortgaged chattels may be brought by the assignee of the mortgage and the secured note without joining the assignor,⁹⁸ although the mortgage debt is charged on the assignor's books as an account, which is not assignable,⁹⁹ but the assignor has been held to be a proper party.¹ The assignee of one partner's interest belonging to a firm may properly join with a remaining partner in an action for the conversion of the mortgaged property.²

An assignee holding under an equitable assignment of a part of the notes secured by a chattel mortgage may intervene in an action by the mortgagee to protect that interest.³

c. Pleading, Evidence, Trial, and Damages

The usual rules of pleading, evidence, trial, and damages in civil actions generally apply.

The general rules governing pleading in civil actions are applicable to actions by assignees of mortgages.⁴ Thus, where the assignee cannot anticipate that defendant will attempt to impeach the mortgage or the assignment, he is not required to plead facts operating as an estoppel;⁵ and, in replevin by the assignee of a junior mortgagee against a senior mortgagee, plaintiff may show in rebuttal that defendant is estopped to claim under his mortgage, although plaintiff failed to plead the estoppel.⁶

Although generally the assignee must prove the assignment of the mortgage by the mortgagee to him,⁷ it has been held that, where the assignee of a chattel mortgage alleges ownership of the mortgage and such allegation is not denied, he need not prove an assignment of the mortgage to him.⁸

Where there is a defense available to the mortgagor if the assignee is not a bona fide holder of the instrument, and where there is evidence reasonably tending to support the defense, the burden is on plaintiff assignee to show that he is such a holder;⁹

Real party in interest

Under a statute providing that every action shall be prosecuted by the real party in interest, the assignee may maintain an action of replevin in his own name if he is the real party in interest.

but, where it is uncontradicted that the assignee paid full value for the note and mortgage before its maturity, the burden is on the mortgagor to prove notice of the defense before the assignee took the instrument.¹⁰

The usual rules of evidence apply to the admissibility¹¹ and weight and sufficiency¹² of evidence in actions of this character.

Where the evidence is conflicting, issues of fact should be submitted to the jury¹³ under proper instructions,¹⁴ but issues as to which there is no conflict in the evidence, or which have not been proved, should not be submitted to the jury.¹⁵

Damages. In an action by the assignee against the mortgagee for conversion, the measure of damages is the market value of the goods at the time and place of conversion, with interest on the amount of recovery, in the discretion of the court.¹⁶ In estimating the damages in trover by the assignee against an attaching officer for conversion of a part of the mortgaged chattels, the amount at which the assignee bid in the remaining part at foreclosure sale, rather than a larger amount for which he afterward sold the same, should be deducted from the mortgage debt.¹⁷ If the assignee asserts his right to possession before the mortgage debt matures, the mortgagor should not be allowed the value of the use of the property from the time of seizure to the time of judgment in the assignee's favor.¹⁸ A pledge of the property by the mortgagee prior to the assignment is admissible on the question of damages.¹⁹

§ 325. Actions against Assignees

The usual rules applicable to civil actions apply in actions against assignees.

When the assignee of a mortgage takes possession of the mortgaged property after condition broken, in accordance with the terms of the mortgage, the legal title to the property is in him, and the mortgagor cannot bring trover to recover the value thereof.²⁰ On the other hand, the mortgagor can recover possession of the property by an action of replevin where the assignee acquired possession by an act of trespass, and the mortgagor demanded the return of the property, before the assignment of the mortgage.²¹

Defenses. Where the equitable assignee of a mortgage obtains possession of the mortgaged property from the holder of the legal title, he may set up as a defense the outstanding superior title, with which he thus connects himself, to defeat detinue brought by the mortgagor for recovery of the property,²² and in an action of replevin by a claimant of mortgaged property the assignee of the mortgage is entitled to the same protection as the mortgagee.²³ In an action against the assignee by the

assignor on a note given as consideration for the assignment, the defense of failure of consideration can be predicated on the assignor's misrepresentations that there were no prior mortgages without a showing of fraud on the part of the assignor.²⁴

Evidence. In an action against an assignee for conversion, evidence for defendant that the mortgagee disclosed information regarding the disappearance of the mortgaged property was held admissible.²⁵ The usual rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply.²⁶

Trial. In trover by the mortgagor against the assignee, plaintiff may, where the evidence is otherwise material and competent, show anything to make out his case which is covered by the opening of his counsel.²⁷

Damages. In an action by the mortgagor against the assignee of the mortgage for conversion of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor must account to the assignee for the amount of the indebtedness due on the date of the assignment.²⁸ Similarly, where the mortgagee bids in the property at foreclosure sale, credits the amount realized on the mortgage debt, and then sells the property and assigns the remaining portion of the debt, if the foreclosure sale is for any reason invalid, the mortgagor in an action against the assignee to recover the value of the property is entitled to recover only the excess, if any, in the value of the property over the mortgage debt.²⁹

XIII. DISCHARGE OR RELEASE OF MORTGAGE OR DEBT AND TERMINATION OF LIEN

§ 326. Termination of Lien in General

Ordinarily a mortgage lien continues, as between the parties, until discharged or released.

In the absence of statutes to the contrary, the lien of a mortgage continues as between the parties until it is discharged or released.³⁰ Under some statutes, in the absence of a proper extension of the mortgage, the lien thereof, as to third persons, ceases to exist within a prescribed number of days from the maturity of the indebtedness secured.³¹

A married woman mortgagee, who joins her husband in a conveyance of the chattels and real property, for the purpose of relinquishing her dower, an interest having passed to him, does not thereby extinguish the chattel mortgage.³²

Extinguishment of lien where mortgagee wrongfully takes possession for purpose of foreclosure see infra § 395.

§ 327. Waiver of, and Estoppel to Claim, Lien

A mortgagee may waive his lien or be estopped to enforce it.

A mortgagee may waive his mortgage lien, or be estopped to enforce it, by conduct inconsistent with its existence.³³ Such waiver or estoppel need not,

Acceptance of prior mortgage as collateral

Where a cotton planter had agreed to give his employee the cotton on a four-acre tract, to be selected by the employee at picking time from the planter's three tracts, and the employee had mortgaged his cotton to the planter for supplies describing it as four acres of cotton on the land of the planter, and the planter thereafter transferred the employee's mortgage to plaintiff, who already held a mortgage on the cotton on a forty-acre tract, executed after the

of course, be shown by written evidence,³⁴ nor be supported by consideration,³⁵ and may be established by circumstances surrounding the transaction or by evidence of a general course of dealing between the parties.³⁶ However, the acts relied on as a waiver or estoppel must have been done with knowledge,³⁷ and in order for mere silence of the mortgagee to work an estoppel, he must have both a specific opportunity and an apparent duty to speak.³⁸ Also, an estoppel can arise only where the one relying thereon has changed his position to his material detriment because of the conduct of the mortgagee,³⁹ and the one claiming the benefit thereof must have relied on material acts or representations and must have had no knowledge of, or convenient means of knowing, the true facts.⁴⁰ Furthermore, there is no implication in law or fact that the mortgagee has waived his security as to the remainder of the property, because he waived his lien as to a portion thereof.⁴¹

In determining whether there was or was not a waiver, the intention of the parties, although not employee's mortgage, plaintiff, by accepting from the employee payment of the mortgage so transferred as collateral security from the proceeds of cotton on four acres selected by the employee out of the tract, covered by the planter's subsequent mortgage, ratified the selection of the tract by the employee, and cannot object to the employee's claim for the balance of the proceeds from such cotton on the ground that the description in the employee's mortgage was insufficient to take that cotton out from plaintiff's mortgage.—Davis v. Bartig Mercantile Co., Mo. App., 236 S.W. 423.

Breach of agreement between mortgagee landlord and mortgagor tenants

Breach of agreement between mortgagee landlord and mortgagor tenants regarding storage of cotton covered by mortgage and rent and supply liens in favor of landlord, with knowledge of landlord, did not constitute a waiver by landlord of rights under mortgage so as to vest title to cotton in tenants or authorize tenants to convey to purchasers in good faith for value by sale of cotton and delivery of negotiable warehouse receipts.—Schmitt v. Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., 153 So. 815, 169 Miss. 589.

Under contract for sale of timber

(1) A vendor of a tract of timber land having in effect a chattel mortgage on the timber under his contract for sale, was not estopped to assert his lien on the lumber, cut by the purchaser of the land and timber, because of his agent's agreement that the purchaser might use proceeds of cross-ties cut by him to enable him to proceed with operations or of the agent's knowledge that purchaser was having such work done by claimants of laborers' liens, in absence of showing that agent did anything to lead claimants to suppose that vendor would waive its contract rights.—Elk Creek Lumber Co. v. Hamby, C.C.A.N.C., 84 F.2d 144.

(2) Also, in such a situation, the vendor's cancellation of the contract on the purchaser's default, as authorized by the contract, did not preclude vendor from asserting lien, given by contract, on lumber cut by purchaser for balance due thereunder as against claimants of laborers' liens for manufacturing lumber.—*Elk Creek Lumber Co. v. Letter of mortgagee to bank

Where holders of a mortgage on live stock on request of the owner wrote a bank that they were willing to carry the owner's indebtedness over another year if the bank would take up his indebtedness to a cattle loan company, and the bank satisfied such indebtedness, taking a second mortgage on the cattle from the owner, it was held, that the holders of the first mortgage were not estopped against the bank from claiming their mortgage as a lien on the cattle, as the letter in no manner requested the bank to take up the owner's indebtedness to the cattle loan company, or contained anything having the least tendency to estop the holders of the first mortgage.—Slimmer v. Meade County Bank of Sturgis, 161 N.W. 325, 38 S.D. 311, rehearing denied Slimmer & Thomas v. Meade County Bank of Sturgis, 162 N.W. 536, 39 S.D. 8.

controlling, is important,⁴² and the mortgagee may testify as to his intention.⁴³

§ 328. Payment of Debt

A mortgage and the interest transferred thereby are extinguished by a proper payment of the debt secured.

A mortgage, being but an incident of the debt which it is given to secure, the title or interest transferred by the mortgage is extinguished when the debt has been wholly paid,⁴⁴ and the title or interest transferred reverts in the mortgagor without a redelivery or resale of the property or a cancellation of the mortgage.⁴⁵ Thereafter, the mortgage necessarily ceases to be a lien on the property,⁴⁶ and the mortgagee's right to possession terminates,⁴⁷ but he need do no more than return so much of the property as remains after the debt is paid.⁴⁸

On a voluntary payment of the debt secured by a first mortgage, a second mortgage on the same property becomes eo instante a prior lien, and the holder of the second mortgage is entitled to recover possession of the mortgaged property according to the terms of his mortgage,⁴⁹ and where the first mortgagee becomes the purchaser of the mortgaged property for an amount larger than his debt, the second mortgagee is entitled to the surplus after satisfying his debt.⁵⁰

Place of payment. Where no place of payment is specified in a chattel mortgage, it is the duty of the mortgagor to seek the mortgagee and make payment to him in person.⁵¹ In case the mortgage debt is evidenced by a promissory note which is silent as to the place of payment, in accordance with the general rules laid down in the title Bills and Notes § 441, it is presumed that the debt is payable where the payor of the note resides or has his place of business.⁵² If, on the other hand, the note by its terms specifies a place of payment, it is payable there,⁵³ and it has been held that a note, secured

Trust receipt rendered functus officio

Where automobile dealer borrowed money to pay draft covering shipment of cars, gave lender a trust receipt, and, on being unable to pay loan when due, negotiated new loan from finance company, giving note and bill of sale on cars, and after return of trust receipt gave it also to finance company, it was held that the trust receipt was rendered functus officio, and its return and delivery to finance company did not constitute effective assignment thereof, placing finance company in position of original lender.—Keystone Finance Corporation v. 53. Note payable at place of business of trust company

In a mortgage conditioned to pay a sum in installments, "secured by . . . notes . . . payable on the fifteenth day of each and every month," the quoted phrase operated to fix the time and manner of payment, and, the notes being payable at a named trust company, mortgagor was not in default, where on the maturity of a note she had on deposit with the trust company an amount

by a chattel mortgage, which is dated, made, and delivered in a particular place, is payable there.⁵⁴

Renewal or extension of mortgage after payment. Where the mortgage debt has been paid in full, a verbal agreement that it shall stand as security for a further indebtedness and for future advances to be made to the mortgagor is void under a statute which forbids the creation, renewal, or extension of chattel mortgages otherwise than by writing.⁵⁵

§ 329. — Who May Pay and Rights of Person Paying

A person other than the debtor may pay the mortgage debt. Such a payment extinguishes the mortgage as far as he is concerned, unless equity otherwise requires, or he intended otherwise.

Payment of the debt secured by a mortgage may be made by a person other than the debtor and without his knowledge.⁵⁶ Thus, a creditor seeking to subject to his debt the property of his debtor on which there exists a mortgage may pay to the mortgagee the amount of the mortgage debt, and such payment discharges the mortgage lien.⁵⁷ However, it has been held that, while strictly speaking the legal effect is to discharge the mortgage lien, yet equity will preserve the lien so far as to prevent injustice to the creditor in case the proceeding against the debtor fails by reason of some defect.⁵⁸

Where one who has become the owner of the equity of redemption pays off the debt the mortgage is extinguished,⁵⁹ and a purchaser in good faith of property subject to two mortgages will be protected in equity, where he makes payment to the persons entitled thereto;⁶⁰ but a voluntary payment by a third person will not operate to discharge the mortgage unless that is manifestly his intention or such a result is clearly to his interest.⁶¹ Thus, a purchaser of mortgaged property at execution sale subject to the mortgage may either pay off the mortgage and thus protect his purchase, or purchase the mortgage and take an assignment thereof; if he pays off the mortgage it will be extinguished, but if he takes the mortgage by purchase and assignment, it continues as an operative instrument in his hands.⁶² However, if payment is made with the mortgagor's money by one who purchased the property at sheriff's sale to aid the debtor in defrauding his creditors, the mortgage is extinguished.⁶³ Also, a purchaser of mortgaged chattels, who pays the amount of the note secured thereby to the payee named therein, does so at his own risk where he does not require either the exhibition of the note or the furnishing of a release.⁶⁴

Taking up mortgage notes for the makers has been held not to discharge the mortgage securing the notes where it was the intention of the parties that it should continue in force,⁶⁵ but where the money was supplied to the assignee in part by the mortgagor, the mortgage is pro tanto discharged.⁶⁶ The payment of insurance money to the mortgagee on a policy which has been taken out by him without the knowledge of the mortgagor will not extinguish the mortgage, but if the insurance has been effected at the request or by the authority of the mortgagor, or at his expense, or under circumstances that would make him chargeable with the premium, he will, it seems, be entitled to its benefits by applying the money paid in extinguishment of his debt pro tanto.⁶⁷

Whether the transaction amounts to a payment or a purchase depends on the circumstances in evidence.⁶⁸

Payment by assignee of mortgage

§ 330. — Time for Payment

The time for payment may be extended by agreement and the acceptance of full payment after default is a waiver of forfeiture.

Payment of the debt in full after default, if accepted by the mortgagee, is a waiver of forfeiture, and extinguishes all his right and interest in the property,⁶⁹ but acceptance of a partial payment after forfeiture will not be construed as a waiver of the forfeiture.⁷⁰

Extension of time. An agreement to extend the time for the payment of the mortgage debt is valid and enforceable if supported by legally sufficient consideration,⁷¹ and such an agreement has the effect of suspending the right to enforce payment during the period of extension.⁷² A part payment of interest made and accepted after default has been considered as a waiver and an extension of the time of payment of the indebtedness.⁷³

Although the mortgage is under seal, the time for payment may be extended by parol.⁷⁴

An assignee may extend the time for payment.⁷⁵

Debt payable in installments. While there is no consideration to support an agreement by the mortgagee to extend the time for payment of an installment, yet by accepting the payment the mortgagee waives his right to a forfeiture.⁷⁶ Where the debt is secured by several notes and the mortgagee has the right to accelerate the maturity of all the notes on default of payment of one of them, the right to have acceleration because of default in payment of one of the notes is waived by acceptance of subsequent payments, and cannot arise again until there is a subsequent default.⁷⁷ However, where a mortgage provides that on default in payment of any installment the whole debt should mature, etc., the mortgagee does not waive his right to foreclose without first demanding the property by accepting payments in amounts and at times other than those mentioned in the mortgage.⁷⁸

Payment of an installment on the required date is excused if it is prevented by the acts of the mortgagee alone or in combination with third persons.⁷⁹

§ 331. — What Constitutes Payment

In the absence of statute, what constitutes payment depends on the intention of the parties as gathered from the entire transaction.

What constitutes payment of a mortgage depends on the intention of the parties as gathered from the entire transaction.⁸⁰ So, if the parties agree on the amount due, payment of this amount satisfies the mortgage,⁸¹ but the payment and discharge of a collateral agreement does not so operate,⁸² and while a default by which the title becomes absolute in the mortgagee gives him control of the property for the purpose of applying it to his debt, this does not of itself operate as a payment of the mortgage debt.⁸³

The acceptance by the mortgagee of any part of the fine imposed on the mortgagor for a wrongful sale of the property, under some statutes, extinguishes the whole debt, both principal and interest.⁸⁴

Mortgage in same transaction with real estate mortgage

Where chattel mortgage for two thousand dollars and realty bond and mortgage for seven thousand five hundred dollars were given in single transaction as security for purchase price of realty and personalty, chattel mortgage reciting that it was "collateral" to realty mortgage and should be discharged when principal on realty mortgage was reduced by two thousand dollars, and realty mortgage was foreclosed with deficiency judgment of three thousand five hundred seventy-six dollars, that value of property as determined under statute was three thousand four hundred twenty-four dollars greater than amount of prior liens was held not to discharge chattel mortgage as would cash payment to that extent, since chattel mortgage was "collateral security" and parties intended that it should be discharged only if realty remained as security for balance.—Lenner v. Corso, 295 N.Y.S. 827, 162 Misc. 500.

Part payment. In order that payment may discharge the mortgage it must be a payment of the whole debt; a part payment will not release the lien except by agreement of the parties,⁸⁵ but where the mortgagee surrenders the mortgage note on payment of a portion of the amount due, and allows the note to be marked "paid," he will be estopped to claim that a balance is still due as against a bona fide purchaser of the property.⁸⁶

Payment with property. Whether the delivery of property to the mortgagee constitutes a payment of the mortgage debt, depends on the intention of the parties.⁸⁷ If the mortgagee agrees to accept property in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, the tender and acceptance of such property, pursuant to the agreement, will be equivalent to payment.⁸⁸ However, the mere acceptance by a mortgagee of property other than that mortgaged, and the crediting of the same at an agreed price on the mortgage, does not show an agreement to release the mortgaged property;⁸⁹ and it has been held that such property does not constitute an extinguishing credit merely, because the mortgagee has a prior lien thereon, where its value exceeds the amount due on the mortgage.⁹⁰ Also, it has been held that an agreement to accept payment of mortgage notes in personal property at a particular price does not destroy the legal effect of the mortgage as security for the note.⁹¹

Whether a deed to property is given in satisfaction of the mortgage or merely as collateral security therefor, depends, of course, on the intention of the parties; however, until the contrary is shown the presumption is that the indebtedness is not satisfied by a conveyance where the creditor retains the evidence of indebtedness.⁹²

The failure to deliver property promptly, pursuant to an agreement that it shall be accepted as payment, may be waived by the mortgagee.⁹³

Payment with services. A mortgage debt may also, by agreement between the parties, be paid by the performance of services.⁹⁴ Where the agreement is that the services of the mortgagor shall be applied on the mortgage debt, the law will make the application as the services are performed, and the mortgage will be discharged and the title to the property revested in the mortgagor whether the application is in fact made by the holder of the mortgage or not.⁹⁵ However, where the mortgagor, performing services under such an agreement was allowed to draw almost all of the amount due for the work, in cash, it was held that the mortgage was not discharged.⁹⁶

Counterclaims against mortgagee. The fact that a mortgagee is indebted to the mortgagor in an amount equal to the mortgage indebtedness does not of itself discharge a mortgage,⁹⁷ and a bequest by the mortgagee to the mortgagor will not extinguish the mortgage debt pro tanto unless there is something in the terms of the bequest showing such an intention;⁹⁸ but an agreement to apply a claim in favor of the mortgagor in payment of the mortgage will operate to discharge it, although such claim is filed in set-off in another action between the parties.⁹⁹ The mortgagor may, likewise, direct that an unquestioned indebtedness due to him by the holder of the mortgage shall be applied toward the payment of the same, and such direction on the part of the mortgagor is equivalent to payment.¹

§ 332. — Receipts for, and Indorsement of Payments

A receipt for payment is necessary, where required by statute. It is not necessary to indorse payments on the mortgage, in the absence of statute.

Under statutes in some jurisdictions, a mortgage on household goods shall be void, unless the holder of the mortgage gives a receipt for any payments made. Such a statute has been declared constitutional;² and it has been held that it cannot be waived by agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee,³ and that failure to execute such receipts is a complete defense to an action by the mortgagee to recover possession of the mortgaged property.⁴ The statute is designed to protect householders and their families, to some extent, against the consequences of improvident agreements through which they may be stripped of those articles which are necessary to their comfort,⁵ and its provisions are directed primarily to those who loan money and take mortgages on household goods, and not to the owner of goods who sells them and takes a mortgage to secure the purchase price.⁶ Accordingly it has been held that the statute does not apply to a mortgage given to secure the purchase price of furniture used by a single man for a rooming house.⁷

Where the grantee in a trust deed covering chattels issues a receipt reciting that the indebtedness was paid, he is estopped to assert a right to the property as against a purchaser relying in good faith on representations based on the receipt.⁸

Indorsement of payments. It has been held not to be necessary to indorse payments on the mortgage, or the copy thereof filed with the township clerk, in order to render the mortgage valid as to creditors;

but that it is sufficient to file, at the end of the year an affidavit of the amount paid.⁹

§ 333. — Application of Payments

Agreements of the parties or directions of the mortgagor as to the application of payments or of income profits, or proceeds of the mortgaged property, must be observed. If neither party makes an appropriation the law will do so, justly and equitably.

If the parties agree as to the manner of applying payments, such agreement must be observed, unless some controlling equity has intervened.¹ Where the mortgagor gives directions as to the application of his payments, such direction must be followed,¹¹ but if he does not give such direction the mortgagee may make the appropriation.¹ Where neither party makes a specific appropriation, the law will apply the payment according to the equity and justice of the case,¹³ the general rule being that payments will be applied by the court to unsecured rather than to secured, indebtedness.¹ However, it has been held in some jurisdiction that, where the mortgagor owes the mortgagee on an open account, in addition to the mortgage debt and payments are made by the mortgagor, without any application being made by either party, the law will apply the payments to the mortgage debt;¹ and where, on making a partial payment, the mortgagee gives the mortgagor a receipt stating that the payment is made on an open account, the receipt is not conclusive that the payment was directed to be made on the account and not on the mortgage debt but is subject to explanation.¹⁶

A payment by a mortgagor may not be applied to release from the mortgage lien a part of the property which has been sold, where the purchaser has not paid for the property, and has given it away to defraud his creditors.¹⁷ Also, deposits received by the mortgagee from the mortgagor, although exceeding the amount of the mortgage debt, will not constitute a payment, where the mortgagor does not direct that any of the deposits be applied to the payment of the debt, and the mortgagee does not make any such application, the depositor checking against such deposits during the continuance of the mortgage debt.¹⁸ Monthly payments, made in consideration of an extension of the time for payment from month to month, will be applied on the mortgage indebtedness, and will not be treated as interest or as compensation for extensions.¹⁹

Where there are several mortgages, and it does not appear how the mortgagor's payments have been credited, they will be applied to the payment of the first mortgage.²⁰

Income, profits, or proceeds of mortgaged property. A mortgagee in possession must devote rents and profits derived from the mortgaged property to the discharge of the mortgage debt, unless the mortgagor assents to a different appropriation.²¹ Likewise, the proceeds arising from a sale of the property must be applied to the extinguishment of the mortgage debt, without any direction to that effect from the mortgagor and in the absence of an agreement to the contrary.²² If the property is sold by consent of the parties, and the money is paid to the mortgagee, it has been held that he has an absolute right to apply it to the mortgage debt, and it is beyond the power of the mortgagor to direct its appropriation to the payment of another debt owing to the mortgagee.²³ When the mortgagor consents to the sale of the property, on consideration of the application of the proceeds to its debt, it is entitled to enforce such agreement,²⁴ and the mortgagor may authorize the appropriation of the proceeds of part of the mortgaged property to unsecured debts, when no rights of third persons have intervened.²⁵ The mortgagee, on the other hand, is not required to collect the proceeds of a sale of the property by the mortgagor, in the absence of an express agreement to that effect.²⁶

Where two or more notes, secured by a single mortgage, fall due on the same day, and the mortgage fund is not sufficient to pay the entire amount of the notes, the notes should be paid pro rata out of the fund, unless some agreement or paramount equity would require a different mode of payment.²⁷

If the mortgagor and the holder of a first mortgage have agreed on the manner of appropriating the proceeds of the property, the holder of a second mortgage cannot compel a different appropriation,²⁸ and a second mortgagee who has consented to a different application of the proceeds of sale cannot afterward insist that they be applied to the first mortgage.²⁹ Also, where a mortgage as to the portion of the indebtedness secured creates a lien subordinate to a second mortgage, and as to the remaining portion creates a prior lien, the holder of such mortgage is, as to the second mortgagee, bound to apply the proceeds of the same coming into his hands to the discharge of the portion of the indebtedness as to which the prior lien exists.³⁰

Where the mortgagee sells the property to pay the mortgage, he cannot deny the mortgagor's title thereto.³¹

Where a mortgage is conditioned to be satisfied on the performance of some particular condition, due performance of the condition discharges the mortgage.³² Thus, where a mortgage is given to secure the delivery of articles of merchandise at a certain time, and not to secure the payment of money, if the articles are not delivered at the stipulated time, but are afterward delivered and accepted, the lien created by the mortgage is thereby discharged.³³ However, the performance, to be effective, must be in accordance with the intention of the parties as expressed in the instrument.³⁴ Accordingly, a mortgage conditioned on the mortgagor's appearance at the next term of court, and given to protect sureties on a recognizance bond, is not discharged by his appearance, if the case is continued and the mortgage is properly kept alive by renewals.³⁵

Under some statutes, after breach of a condition in the mortgage, the mortgagor and his grantee have a legal right of redemption for a specified period of time, so that compliance with the condition after the breach thereof but within the time specified, immediately terminates the vital existence of the mortgage and takes the title to the property from the mortgagee instant.³⁶

Termination of lease containing mortgage clause. Where a lessor elects to terminate the lease, in accordance with its provisions, for breach of covenant, such election does not discharge the lien of a mortgage contained in the lease, and given as security for the performance of the covenants on the part of the lessee.³⁷ A conditional settlement for the rent and discharge of a mortgage clause in a lease is not effective where the prescribed conditions have not been performed.³⁸ However, where a mortgage is given to secure the performance of obligations assumed under a lease, it will be discharged if the terms of the lease are fulfilled at the expiration of the term thereof, or if, during the term, the lessor with the consent of the lessee, cancels the lease and assumes possession of the demised premises.³⁹

§ 335. Indemnity Mortgages

An indemnity mortgage is discharged by the mortgagor's payment of the primary obligation; but surety's payment thereof does not have this effect, unless the parties so intend.

Where a mortgage is given to indemnify the mortgagee against a debt for which he is secondarily liable, payment, by the mortgagor, of the debt or obligation thus secured will discharge the mortgage lien,⁴⁰ but payment by the surety will not have a like effect,⁴¹ unless such was the intention of the parties.⁴² However, where a surety pays the debt for which he is surety and takes a new mortgage on the same property to secure to him the repayment of the money so paid, the first mortgage is discharged.⁴³ Also, if the sureties assign the mortgage to the creditor for his security and he gives them a discharge of their liability as sureties, the mortgage is discharged.⁴⁴

Where a mortgage is given to indemnify the mortgagee for his indorsement of notes executed by the mortgagor, and such notes are paid out of the proceeds of new notes made by the mortgagor and indorsed by the mortgagees for that purpose, the mortgage is not discharged by payment of the original notes, but continues in force as a security for the mortgagees for the amount of the new notes, and in such a case it is proper to show that the payment of the original notes with the proceeds of § 336. Tender

- a. In general
- b. Form and sufficiency in general
- c. Time of making
- d. By whom and to whom made.
- e. Keeping tender good

a. In General

The lien of the mortgage may be discharged by a proper tender of payment.

Although the debt secured by a mortgage continues in existence until paid, notwithstanding a tender of such debt and refusal thereof by the mortgagee or person authorized to recover the same,⁴⁶ the mortgage lien will be discharged by a proper tender of payment.⁴⁷ Tender ipso facto puts an end to the interest of the mortgagee, and restores the sole right of possession to the mortgagor,⁴⁸ and a mortgagee who refuses to restore the property on proper tender is liable for conversion.⁴⁹

Destruction after tender. The loss falls on the mortgagee who has refused to return the mortgaged chattels after a tender of the amount due, in case the chattels are destroyed.⁵⁰

b. Form and Sufficiency in General

The tender must be in good faith, unconditional, in compliance with the mortgage, and for the proper amount.

In order that a tender may operate to discharge the mortgage lien, it must clearly appear that it was fairly made and deliberately and intentionally refused;⁵¹ that it was made unconditionally,⁵² in compliance with the conditions of the mortgage,⁵³ and in good faith, with ability on the part of the person making it to comply therewith.⁵⁴ An offer in writing to pay the amount due has been held to be a sufficient tender.⁵⁵ The source from which the tendered money comes is immaterial so long as the mortgagee could have obtained payment by accepting the tender.⁵⁶ However, tender of the notes of a third person in satisfaction of the mortgage debt does not constitute a satisfaction of the mortgage, although the mortgagee had agreed to accept them previous to the making of the tender.⁵⁷ Likewise, a mortgagor's proposal to turn over to the mortgagee the unindorsed check of a purchaser of the mortgaged property does not constitute a tender of the amount of money named in the check.⁵⁸

A levy on the property by the mortgagee has been held to be a recognition of the validity of a prior tender by the mortgagor of the amount due on the mortgage debt.⁵⁹

Amount. The full and exact amount due according to the terms of the mortgage must be tendered,⁶⁰ including, if the mortgage so provides, the cost

Tender insufficient

A tender of the amount due on a particular note is insufficient where the mortgage also secures the amount due on a note previously executed.—Martin v. Covington, Tex. Civ.App., 21 S.W.2d 363, error dismissed.

Tender sufficient

Tender of the amount due on two mortgages was held to be sufficient to discharge the liens of both of them.—Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Wleck, 29 P.2d 384, 96 Mont. 132.

Amount due on unsecured debt

Mortgagee cannot make acceptance of payment by subsequent purchaser of mortgaged crop conditional on payment of mortgagor's unsecured of insurance,⁶¹ and interest,⁶² although if the debt secured bears usurious interest, a tender of the principal, without interest, will be good.⁶³ If the mortgage has been assigned to a third person who holds the same for the amount that he has paid with interest, a tender of that amount will extinguish the mortgage lien and give the mortgagor right of possession.⁶⁴

Where the tender is made after proceedings have been commenced to enforce the mortgage, it must include reasonable and necessary costs and expenses,⁶⁵ including an attorney's fee, if that is stipulated for in the mortgage.⁶⁶ So, costs and expenses must be included in a tender made after the holder of the mortgage has taken possession of the property under an insecurity clause,⁶⁷ and in case the mortgagee seizes the property under such a clause before the debt is due, a tender of the principal with interest to date, and accrued costs, will discharge the mortgage lien, and interest need not be paid to the date of maturity.⁶⁸

It has been held that, where a tender is made, the holder of the mortgage must have a reasonable opportunity to look over the mortgage and accompanying papers to calculate and ascertain the amount due; and if such papers are not present he must be allowed a reasonable time to get them and make the calculation; he cannot be bound at the hazard of losing his entire debt to carry at all times in his head the precise amount due on any particular day.⁶⁹

Waiver or prevention of tender. A mortgagee may waive a legal tender of the amount due,⁷⁰ as where he prevents an actual and formal tender by refusal to accept it, and by asserting that a larger amount is due.⁷¹ So, a mortgagee cannot insist that a tender should have been made where his agent

by false statements misled the mortgagor into failing to make a tender,⁷² and the mortgagee may waive a legal tender of the amount due him by rendering an incorrect account, coupled with the statement that unless it is paid he will accept nothing; but if he honestly believes the account he renders is correct, and insists on payment of it in that belief, and if that belief, although erroneous, is based on reasonable grounds the refusal of a tender of the amount actually due will not discharge the mortgage lien.⁷³ Under some statutes the person to whom a tender is made must at the time specify any objection he may have to the money, instrument, or property, or he is deemed to have waived it.⁷⁴

Tender by second mortgagee. Where a first mortgagee has replevied property from a second mortgagee after the latter's refusal to deliver on demand, the second mortgagee must add the costs incurred in the replevin suit to the amount he must tender to release the lien of the first mortgage;⁷⁵ but the second mortgagee need only tender the prescribed statutory costs, even though the mortgage contains a stipulation entitling the mortgagee to more extensive costs.⁷⁶

c. Time of Making

In the absence of statute, an effective tender may be made on the day the mortgage is due, or, if the mortgagee has obtained or is seeking to obtain possession, it may be made before maturity; but an effective tender cannot be made after default, unless the mortgagor is in possession of the property.

A mortgage is discharged by a tender of the amount secured thereby on the day the mortgage is due,⁷⁷ and a mortgagee who refuses to accept such a tender is liable in trover for not restoring the goods, as is shown above in §§ 219, 220. If the time of payment is extended on a valid consideration, a tender made within the time as extended is sufficient.⁷⁸ A tender made before the mortgage is due, and when the mortgagee is about to take possession of the property,⁷⁹ or has already taken possession thereof,⁸⁰ in accordance with a stipulation in the mortgage, will discharge the mortgage lien and reinvest the mortgagor with title to the property.

After default. In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary,⁸¹ the general rule is that a mere tender of the debt after breach of the condition does not operate as a discharge of the mortgage, so as to divest the legal title of a mortgagee in possession of the property, and if the mortgagee does not accept the tender the mortgagor's only remedy is an equitable action to redeem,⁸² the only effect of the tender at that time being to stop the running of interest and to protect from costs so long as it is kept good.⁸³ So, the right of the mortgagee to maintain a replevin action for possession of the property for foreclosure purposes is not affected by a tender made after the service of the replevin writ.⁸⁴ However, where the mortgagor is in possession,⁸⁵ and no demand for possession has been made by the mortgagee,⁸⁶ a tender of the amount due will discharge the mortgage lien, although made after default in the condition of the mortgage. In some jurisdictions where mortgages have been converted into mere liens, a tender of the debt after default, but before foreclosure and sale, has been held to have the same effect as a tender on the law day at common law, and releases the lien of the mortgage.⁸⁷

d. By Whom and to Whom Made

Tender may be made by a purchaser of the property, an agent of the mortgagor, or a junior mortgagee. It may be made to a joint mortgagee, an assignee of the mortgage, an agent of the mortgagee, or to constable serving a writ.

A tender may be made by one who has purchased the property from the mortgagor, and, if it meets the requirements of a valid tender,⁸⁸ and the rights of the person making the tender are made known to the mortgagee,⁸⁹ the mortgage lien will be discharged. Likewise, an unconditional tender by a purchaser at an execution sale of the mortgagor's title and interest of the entire debt secured by the mortgage, the debt being due and the tender being kept good, divests the lien of the mortgage and entitles the purchaser to the possession of the property.⁹⁰ Also, a duly authorized agent of the mortgagor may make a tender,⁹¹ but the mortgagee must in such case have a reasonable opportunity to ascertain the agent's authority.⁹² While tender may be made by a junior mortgagee,⁹³ a tender by him, if accompanied by a demand for an assignment of the mortgage, does not extinguish the mortgage lien.⁹⁴

Tender may be made to one of several joint mortgagees,⁹⁵ or to an assignee of the mortgage.⁹⁶ Tender may also be made to an agent of the mortgagee if he is authorized to receive payment of the mortgage debt,⁹⁷ and a subagent who is instructed to take possession of the property has authority to accept a tender of the amount due.⁹⁸ In a proceeding instituted in justice's court, a tender to the constable serving the writ is sufficient.⁹⁹

A tender need not be renewed and may be kept good by paying the money into court.

Where a tender has once been made and refused, it is unnecessary, as a rule, to renew it, and especially is this true where there is no indication that the refusal has been withdrawn or that a tender would be accepted; a payment into court is all that is required in order to keep the tender good.¹ In fact, while there is authority to the contrary,² according to same authorities it is not even necessary to bring the money into court, in order to keep the tender good, where it was made before a breach in the condition.³ However, if the tender is not made until after the maturity of the mortgage debt, the general rule, at least in most of the jurisdictions in which the mortgage vests title to the property in the mortgagee, is that the tender must be kept good by bringing the money into court.⁴ On the other hand, in those jurisdictions in which a mortgage does not vest title in the mortgagee, but only creates a lien in his favor, it is held that, when a mortgagor makes an unconditional tender, even after default, the lien of the mortgage is discharged whether the tender is kept good and the money paid into court or not;⁵ and this rule also obtains in some jurisdictions in which the legal title to mortgaged chattels is regarded as vesting in the mortgagee.⁶

It has been held that, where a mortgagee refuses to accept certain property from the debtor in full satisfaction of the indebtedness on the mortgagor's tender, in accordance with his agreement, the debt is not thereby satisfied and the lien discharged, if the mortgagor does not make a further and continuous tender of the property.⁷

Where the effect of a tender is the extinguishment of the mortgagee's rights, it is not essential that the tender be kept good.⁸ Where, however, it is necessary for the tender to be kept good, this may be done by retaining the money which has been offered to the mortgagee, subject to his order, for the avowed purpose of paying off the mortgage debt and paying it into court at the trial.⁹ It has been indicated that a payment into court, in order to keep the tender good, must be unconditional.¹⁰

Under a statute authorizing the mortgagor to bring replevin if the property is not restored forthwith on payment or tender, it has been held that the money due on the mortgage need not be brought into court.¹¹

§ 337. — Right of Mortgagor to Possession of Mortgage and Note on Tender of Payment

The mortgagor is entitled to possession of the mortgage and note on a valid tender of payment.

The mortgagor has a right, on tender of the amount due, to demand a surrender of the mortgage and the note secured thereby.¹²

§ 338. Change in Form of Debt or Terms of Payment

Generally, a mortgage is not terminated by a change in the form of the debt or terms of payment.

Since a mortgage is regarded as security for the debt and not merely the instrument evidencing the debt, while the original debt remains, the mortgage is not defeated by a change in the form of the debt or in the evidence thereof, but continues as security for the debt in its new form.¹³ Accordingly, a change from a simple contract debt to a personal

Acceptance and transfer of notes

Where goods were sold under a conditional contract, declared by statute to be a mortgage, seller did not waive his lien by taking notes in evidence of the goods sold, nor did he impair his right to a lien by a transfer of notes, given in evidence of the goods sold, to a bank as collateral, and thereafter reacquiring the same, since the transfer of the notes in both cases carried with it such rights in the mortgage as the owner of the notes had.—Moore-Hustead Co. v. Joseph W. Moon Buggy Co., Tex.Civ.App., 221 S.W. 1032.

Acceptance of recognizance in lieu of note

The surrender of a mortgage note and the acceptance of a recognizance in lieu thereof does not discharge the mortgage.—Thurber v. Jewett, 3 Mich. 295.

In assignment of lease for which mortgage is security

Lessee's assignment of lease subject to consent of lessors, on which assignment lessors indorsed their consent on condition of assignee's agreement to pay rental called for by lease as modified, to be bound by terms and conditions thereof, that judgment against the mortgagor will not have that effect, so long as the judgment remains unsatisfied,¹⁴ unless the circumstances are such as to show an intention of the parties to substitute the judgment for the mortgage security.¹⁵ A fortiori the mere commencement of suit on the mortgage note will not operate to discharge it,¹⁶ and as against one who has converted part of the property the lien of the mortgage is not lost by seeking judgment on the debt and obtaining a foreclosure resulting in a deficiency judgment against the mortgagor.¹⁷

An extension of time of payment on the note secured,¹⁸ or the release of a surety thereon,¹⁹ does not amount to a waiver or termination of the mortgage lien.

A junior mortgagee does not acquire any vested right in the contract between the mortgagor and a prior mortgagee so as to preclude them from making changes therein.²⁰

§ 339. — Giving New or Renewal Note

A mortgage is not terminated by the giving of a new or renewal note, unless the parties so intend.

The giving of a new note in renewal of, or in substitution for, that originally given as evidence of the mortgage debt does not of itself discharge the mortgage,²¹ even though the renewal note is for a slightly increased amount,²² and it is immaterial term of lease should be extended for certain period, that rental should be reduced in specified sum, that assignee should carry elevator insurance, and that assignee, as purchaser of personality in premises, should take them subject to mortgage securing lease was not in legal effect a new lease such as to extinguish old lease and discharge chattel mortgage securing it.—Gordon v. Pfeiffer, 274 P. 578, 96 Cal.App. 607.

Surety's note and mortgage not superseded

Where A signs a note as surety for B, payable to C, and gives a mortgage to secure the note on which he is surety, and B also gives a mortgage to secure the note, and before the maturity of the note A and B enter into a written contract with C that B is to sell all his cattle to D at a given price, payment for the same to be applied on the note, and A agrees that, if the money received is insufficient, he will give his individual note due in six months and secured by mortgage, and B's cattle are sold and the money so applied, and there remains a deficiency on A's refusal to carry out the subsequent contract, it was held that such contract did not supersede and cancel the original note and mortgage, and that C had a right to foreclose.—Dunn v. Renewal of mortgage and note

Where mortgage indebtedness is extended by giving of renewal note and mortgage and surrender of original note, the debt and lien are substance of transaction, notes and mortgages being in themselves merely evidence of agreement between parties. Accordingly, under a statute prescribing how lien of chattel mortgage may be discharged, execution and delivery of renewal note and mortgage on same property accompanied by return to mortgagor of original note and duplicate of original mortgage marked paid does not discharge lien of original mortgage which had not been otherwise satisfied or released of record in compliance with statute.—Walker v. Farmers' Bank of Kendrick, 238 P. 968, 41 Idaho 279.

Renewal of bill of sale and note

Holder of original bill of sale given to secure specified debt and future advances did not relinquish lien as to indebtedness subsequently created by taking renewal note and new bill

§ 340. Giving New or Additional Security

A mortgage is not ordinarily terminated by the giving of new or additional security, unless the parties so intend.

The validity of a chattel mortgage is not affected by the fact that the mortgagee holds independent collateral security,²⁹ and the taking of new or additional security to secure the same debt and covering the same property as a prior chattel mortgage does not, of itself, and in the absence of an agreement or understanding to that effect, operate to release or discharge the prior mortgage,³⁰ or to destroy the priority obtained by virtue of the original mortgage.³¹ The same rule has been held to apply where the second mortgage is for an increased amount,³² or where it secures an additional claim,³³ of sale.—Albany Loan & Finance Co. v. Tift, 160 S.E. 661, 43 Ga.App. 789.

Mortgage securing accommodation indorsers not released

Where accommodation indorsers protected by chattel mortgage gave individual notes and took delivery of accommodation notes, there was no relinquishment of mortgage security.—Patrisco v. Nolan's Point Amusement Co., 159 A. 620, 10 N.J. Misc. 397.

Rights of purchaser not impaired

A second chattel mortgage executed to renew note secured by first mortgage did not create new obligation, but merely perpetuated existing lien, and so did not impair rights of purchaser who took title to one-half interest in property subject to lien of first mortgage, notwithstanding that mortgagee had knowledge of purchase when second mortgage was executed.—Schwartzler v. Lemas, Cal.App., 73 P.2d 280.

Depends on intention of parties

Whether the giving of a second chattel mortgage for an increased amount was accompanied by such a settlement of the previously existing indebtedness as to constitute payment thereof, and discharge the first, was held to be a question of fact, to be determined in the light of all the circumstances surrounding the transactions and showing the intention of the parties.—In re Drag, D. or reduces the interest rate,³⁴ or covers additional property³⁵ or property owned by another person;³⁶ and property which is omitted from the new mortgage is not released from a prior mortgage given to secure the same debt, in the absence of an understanding that it shall have that effect.³⁷ However, a mortgage has been held to be discharged by the giving of a new mortgage on the same property where there was a change in the person of the mortgagor without the consent of the original mortgagor,³⁸ or a change in the person of the mortgagee.³⁹ So, also, the giving of a new note and mortgage will operate as a discharge of the old security where such is the agreement or understanding of the parties,⁴⁰ and the same rule applies where the new security is a real estate mortgage,⁴¹ or a pledge of a part of the mortgaged property,⁴² instead of a chattel mortgage. However, where an instrument constituting a pledge of personal property is given in lieu of the chattel mortgage, it will not, in the absence of the delivery of the articles pledged, release the chattel mortgage where the statute provides that no pledge is valid without delivery of the property to the pledgee.⁴³

In some jurisdictions it has been held that a second mortgage for the same debt does not extinguish the first mortgage in the absence of an express release, or at least a release implied from the terms of the mortgage, such as a covenant not to sue.⁴⁴

Whether or not a new mortgage is taken with intent to discharge the old one is a question of fact for the jury,⁴⁵ the burden of proof being on the party asserting that such was the agreement or intent;⁴⁶ and it has been held that the giving of a new note and mortgage and the surrendering of the old makes a prima facie case.⁴⁷ The presumption is that the original note and mortgage are discharged when they have been surrendered and released and replaced by a new note and mortgage on the same property.⁴⁸ The mortgagor may testify as to his intention in giving the new mortgage and note.⁴⁹

§ 341. Resort to, or Release of, Other Security or Remedy

A mortgage is ordinarily terminated where the mortgagee realizes the amount due thereon by resorting to other security.

Where a mortgagee realizes on collateral security and applies to his own use a sufficient amount of the sum thus received to pay the mortgage, the mortgage is discharged.⁵⁰ Where an entire debt is secured by a mortgage on real estate and a part of it by a chattel mortgage, the chattel mortgage is discharged when the decree of foreclosure of the real estate mortgage becomes absolute;⁵¹ but a purchase by the mortgagee at a sale on foreclosure of a real estate mortgage will not discharge a chattel mortgage given to secure the same debt.⁵²

Where the senior mortgagee having a mortgage for the same debt on the mortgagor's homestead releases the mortgage on the homestead, such act does not render him liable to a junior mortgagee because other property must be exhausted before a resort could be had to the homestead,⁵³ and the same doctrine has been applied to a mortgage by a partnership covering both firm and individual property.⁵⁴

§ 342. Transfer or Other Disposition of Mortgaged Property

- a. In general
- b. Transfer to mortgagee
- c. Seizure or conversion by mortgagee in general
- d. Seizure under attachment
- e. Seizure under execution

a. In General

While a mortgagee may not lose his lien by turning over legal possession of the property to the mortgagor's administrator, he may lose his lien by transferring title to the mortgagor, and under some statutes his lien on a crop is lost where he consents to or negligently permits its removal.

A mortgagee does not lose his lien because, after having legally obtained possession of the mortgaged chattels, he turns them over to an administrator of the mortgagor solely for the purpose of saving delay and expense in reducing the property to cash.⁵⁵ However, where a mortgagee having title to the mortgaged chattels transfers title thereto to the mortgagor giving him written evidence of unqualified ownership, he is estopped from thereafter asserting as against a good faith purchaser from the mortgagor that there was no intention to release the property.⁵⁶ Likewise, as is shown above in § 262, a mortgagee ordinarily waives the mortgage lien by consenting to a sale of the property by the mortgagor.

Removal of crops. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the lien of a crop mortgage does not terminate on the harvesting of the crop, unless the parties in their contract provide otherwise.⁵⁷ Under the statutes in some jurisdictions, the lien of a mortgage on a growing crop is lost by a removal of the crop from the land after severance, with the consent of the mortgagee,⁵⁸ or through his failure to exercise reasonable diligence.⁵⁹ However, under such a statute, it has been held that the lien of the mortgage is not lost when the removal is tortious,⁶⁰ whether removed by the mortgagor⁶¹ or by a third person,⁶² or where the crop is removed by the mortgagee for his better security,⁶³ or where the mortgagor removes it at the request of, and as agent of, the mortgagee with instructions to have the same stored in the latter's name, even though the one receiving the crop under such circumstances

Removal not tortious

A removal is not tortious as to a mortgagee, where the removal is by virtue of the sale of the crop by the landlord of the mortgagor, pursuant to a provision of the lease, which was also made a part of the crop mortgaged.—Gates v. Tom Quong, 85 P. 662, 3 Cal.App. 443.

Tortious storing of grain erroneously stored it in the name of the mortgagor.⁶⁴ Further, such a statute being for the protection of those who stand in the position of bona fide purchasers, a consignee who makes advances on the crop while still on the land where grown does so with notice, and is not entitled to superiority over the claim of the mortgagee.⁶⁵

Where a creditor of a lessee, who, without knowledge of the lessor, had a mortgage on the lessee's crop, induced the lessee without false representations to remove his grain to the creditor's farm to be threshed and afterward attached it, he was not estopped to deny the continuance of the mortgagor's lien after its removal from the land on which it was grown.⁶⁶

b. Transfer to Mortgagee

A valid transfer of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee may operate to extinguish the mortgage debt when the parties so intend.

A purchase by, and a transfer of the mortgaged property to, the mortgagee absolutely, operates to extinguish the mortgage debt when that is the intention of the parties,⁶⁷ at least where the mortgagor has a legal right to transfer the property in this manner;⁶⁸ but the transaction must be established as fully as any other transfer of property in payment of a debt,⁶⁹ and the burden is on the mortgagee to show that the sale was voluntarily made and that the consideration was fair.⁷⁰ An agreement by a mortgagor to deliver the mortgaged property, or a specified portion thereof, in full payment of the mortgage debt imports a sufficient consideration to support the mortgagee's promise to deliver up the mortgage and evidences of indebtedness.⁷¹

A mortgagee does not lose his lien by receiving the mortgaged property under an agreement to sell it with the privilege of retaining the amount of the mortgage from the price, the transaction constituting a purchase of the equity of redemption in contravention of the insolvency law;⁷² nor is his lien lost in such a situation where the mortgagor breaches the contract and renders lawful performance by the mortgagee impossible.⁷³ Also, where a mortgagor executed a bill of sale of the property to the mortgagee, falsely representing that the property was free from all liens except the mortgage, the bill of sale was held not to operate as a satisfaction of the mortgage.⁷⁴

Agreement for return of property to mortgagee.

Where property is sold under an agreement that if it does not comply with the warranty it may be returned without payment, and it is returned as defective, a mortgage given to secure payment of the purchase price is discharged;⁷⁵ and a return of the property because unsatisfactory, and the substitution of other property therefor, in accordance with an agreement between the parties, will not satisfy the mortgage and the note which it was given to secure.⁷⁶

c. Seizure or Conversion by Mortgagee in General

A mortgagee waives his lien by a conversion of the property, or, as to third persons, by his failure promptly to enforce his lien after default. The debt is satisfied to the extent of the value of the property either by his conversion thereof, or his seizure of it after default.

A conversion of the mortgaged property to his own use by the holder of the mortgage satisfies the mortgage debt to the extent of the value of the property,⁷⁷ constitutes a waiver of the mortgage lien,⁷⁸

and effects an extinguishment thereof.⁷⁹ Thus, where the mortgagee after condition broken takes possession of a part of the property and retaining the same assigns the mortgage to a third person, he is guilty of a conversion of such property, and the value thereof should be applied in payment of the mortgage.⁸⁰ So also a sale after default in violation of statutory requirements is a conversion of the property which will operate to extinguish the lien of the mortgage,⁸¹ and the mortgagor will be credited with payment up to the value of the property, the debt being extinguished only to this extent.⁸² However, the mortgagee is not considered to have exercised such control over the property as to defeat his lien because of an act of his agent against his express directions,⁸³ or because he takes possession under a claim of ownership,⁸⁴ or because he, as landlord holding a mortgage on the household furniture of his tenant as security for rent, takes possession of the furniture on its abandonment by the tenant and cares for it,⁸⁵ or because he uses the property temporarily with the assent of the mortgagor.⁸⁶

While the mortgagee's seizure of the property after default does not ipso facto extinguish the mortgage,⁸⁷ yet if he retains possession after such seizure instead of foreclosing, the mortgage debt is satisfied to the extent of the value of the property so taken,⁸⁸ uncertainty as to the value thereof being resolved against him,⁸⁹ except where the mortgagor has consented to such conduct on the part of the mortgagee,⁹⁰ or where the mortgagee's failure to sell is due to the fact that his right to the property is disputed by a third person and has not been determined,⁹¹ or where it is apparent that possession is taken merely to protect the security.⁹² However, a mortgage is not avoided or discharged by the failure of the mortgagee to foreclose immediately on default,⁹³ or on default in the payment of one of several installments of the mortgage debt.⁹⁴

Where the mortgage gives the mortgagor only a qualified right to possession of the mortgaged property, laches of the mortgagee in failing to take prompt possession of the mortgaged property upon default in the payment of the debt secured, when it becomes due, will defeat the lien, as against third persons,⁹⁵ unless such persons have notice of the mortgage.⁹⁶ However, if the instrument is violated before maturity of the debt the mortgagee is not bound to take possession and may waive the breach without endangering his lien,⁹⁷ and as between the parties the lien is not lost by failure of the mort-

On violation of provision as to transfer of mortgage

Even if a provision in a mortgage prohibits a transfer or sale by the mortgagor without the written con-

gagee to enforce it at once upon default.⁹⁸ Under some statutes, while the status of the lien is not effected as between the parties,⁹⁹ the lien of the mortgage is lost as against third persons if the mortgagee does not take possession of the property or obtain a renewal of the mortgage within a prescribed period after the debt matures,¹ unless such third persons have notice of the mortgage.²

Where the mortgagee waives his lien by a conversion, as far as his rights against one claiming the right to possession of the property in a replevin action are concerned, it is immaterial whether the conversion took place before or after the commencement of the action.³

While a second mortgagee may insist that the first mortgage be foreclosed in the manner provided by statute, an irregular sale in good faith for the purpose of raising funds to discharge a mortgage debt does not constitute a waiver of a mortgagee's rights as against the second mortgagee of the same property; the remedy of the second mortgagee in such case is an action in replevin or trover with the right to recover the property subject to, or the value thereof, over and above, the obligation secured by the first mortgage.⁴

d. Seizure under Attachment

The decisions are in disagreement as to whether an attachment of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee constitutes a waiver of his lien. The mortgagee does not waive his lien by failing to object to an attachment of the mortgaged property by other creditors.

The decisions are not uniform as to the effect of an attachment levied on the mortgaged property by the mortgagee.⁵ In some jurisdictions where a mortgage is regarded as transferring the legal title to the mortgagee, the fact that the mortgagee attaches the property covered by the mortgage has been held to constitute a waiver of the mortgage lien,⁶ even though the property is attached in an action on a debt other than the one secured by the mortgage.⁷ However, as between mortgagees it would seem that a first mortgagee does not waive his lien by attaching the property.⁸

On the other hand, where the mortgage merely constitutes a lien on the property an attachment levied thereon by the mortgagee does not constitute a waiver of the mortgage lien,⁹ especially where the attachment suit does not go to judgment.¹⁰

In addition to the authorities making this distinction it should be noted that in some jurisdictions the remedy by attachment is regarded as consistent with and may be pursued without waiver of the mortgage lien, without regard to whether title or a mere security is given by the mortgage;¹¹ and in some jurisdictions where, although the legal title is regarded as passing to the mortgagee, the mortgagor has an equity of redemption which is subject to execution, the mortgagee may attach such equity of redemption without waiving his mortgage lien.¹² In some jurisdictions where the lien theory prevails, the rule that an attachment by the mortgagee does not have the effect of waiving the mortgage lien is based on a statute giving the mortgagor an equity of redemption which may be levied on.¹³

Duty of mortgagee to assert claim against attachment. Under a statute permitting levy on the interest of the mortgagor in case certain conditions are complied with, the mortgagee is not required to take any steps for the sole purpose of shielding the debtor's property.¹⁴ A mortgagee who learns of the levy of an attachment on the mortgaged property is under no obligation to notify the attaching creditor and get him to stop further proceedings sent of the mortgagee and authorizes the mortgagee to take possession in the event of a breach of this provision, the mortgagee does not lose his lien as to third persons because he fails to take possession upon such a default.—Blake-Silkwood Motor Co. v. Spires, 245 Ill.App. 148.

in the attachment suit,¹⁵ and his failure to object to the taking of the property by the sheriff does not constitute a waiver of his right to possession under the mortgage lien.¹⁶ Consent to a levy on part of the mortgaged property will not prevent a mortgagee from enforcing his claims against the remaining part.¹⁷

A mortgagee does not ordinarily waive his lien by levying an execution against the mortgaged property.

The levy on the mortgaged property of execution on a judgment obtained in an action on the mortgage debt by the holder of the mortgage does not have the effect of waiving the mortgage lien, where the levy is released before a sale of the property is made,¹⁸ or where it is not shown that the property has been sold under the execution, or that the debt has been satisfied in whole or in part.¹⁹ Further, in a jurisdiction where the lien theory prevails, it has been held that a mortgagee who obtains a judgment for the mortgage debt, levies execution on the chattels, and sells all of them except such property as is exempt from execution, does not thereby release his lien and claim under the mortgage to the exempt property.²⁰ Likewise, the owner of a senior mortgage does not waive the priority of his lien by recovering a judgment on the note which it secures and causing an execution to be levied on the mortgaged property.²¹ So a mortgagee does not waive his lien where, in a replevin action, an erroneous judgment is entered in his favor for its value, instead of a judgment in the alternative for possession, etc., and he thereafter levies execution on the mortgaged property and becomes the purchaser thereof at such sale.²²

§ 343. Merger

Whether a mortgage is terminated by merger depends upon the intention of the parties and the equities of the case.

Whether a mortgage has merged depends ordinarily upon the intention of the parties and the equities of the case,²³ and, where it is for the best interests of the mortgagee not to merge legal and equitable titles, he may refrain from so doing.²⁴ Accordingly, the assignment of the interests of both mortgagor and mortgagee to the same person does not operate to discharge the mortgage on the doctrine of merger, unless the parties so intend it,²⁵ and there is no merger where the purchaser of both the mortgage and the mortgaged property exhibits a clear intent to keep the mortgage alive.²⁶ Likewise, in equity the mortgage is not merged when the mortgagee acquires legal title, where this would be against his interest.²⁷ A fortiori after the mortgagee has parted with his interest, an assignment of the equity of redemption to him does not extinguish the mortgage.²⁸ The intention that the mortgage lien shall be extinguished will not be presumed where the interest of the purchaser of the mortgage and the mortgaged property requires that the mortgage shall remain in force,²⁹ and a transfer of the property to the holder of the mortgage, expressly

(1) Where a chattel mortgage was given as collateral security for a real estate bond and mortgage, the mortgagee's acceptance of a quitclaim deed to the premises covered by the real estate mortgage from mortgagors in bankruptcy sale did not extinguish mortgagors' obligation under chattel mortgage through merger.—Burton v. Klein, 239 N.Y.S. 103, 135 Misc. 571.

(2) Interest created by mortgage taken by assignee of creditors' claims was not merged in interest transferred by subsequent assignment to mortgagee as assignee for benefit of creditors, as against creditor exempt from participation in proceeds of assignment.—Smith v. subject to the mortgage debt, evidences an intention that no merger shall be effected.³⁰

On the other hand, subject to the foregoing rules, where the mortgagee acquires title to the mortgaged property the mortgage will be merged in the title,³¹ and the lien of the mortgage will be extinguished where the mortgage is purchased by one who has previously bought the mortgaged property and has agreed to assume or to discharge the encumbrances existing thereon.³² Likewise, where a junior mortgagee purchases the property at sale on execution against the mortgagor and pays off a prior mortgage, his own mortgage and debt will thereby be extinguished;³³ and where a mortgagor and a mortgagee transferred their respective interests to a corporation, taking stock in the corporation in payment therefor, it was held that the rights that the corporation acquired as the equitable assignee of the mortgage, if any, were merged in its title to the property acquired from the mortgagor.³⁴ So also a mortgage may be merged in an agreement of sale of the mortgaged property.³⁵

Where an owner of land leased the same to the owner of a mill situated thereon, and the landowner subsequently purchased the mill and lease, the purchase did not operate to extinguish the lien of an extinguishing chattel mortgage on the mill, nor to prevent its enforcement by one to whom the mortgage had been assigned after such purchase.³⁶

Where the holder of a second mortgage acquires the first, the legal title remaining in a third person, it is questionable whether the doctrine of merger is at all applicable; if it is, the rule that the intention of the parties and the equities of the case govern should be even more stringently applied than in the ordinary case where legal and equitable title have passed into the same hands.³⁷

Rights of parties not affected

The fact that a mortgage, standing uncanceled on the records, was surrendered to the mortgagor when his note, only one of the debts secured, was paid, does not affect the rights of the parties; it not appearing that a subsequent purchaser of the mort-

An assignment of the mortgage to the mortgagor operates as a release of the mortgage lien.³⁸ However, a surrender of the mortgage to the mortgagor through an oversight does not have this effect,³⁹ and it has been held that where a mortgage executed by a partnership was purchased by the executor of one of the partners, such purchase did not constitute a payment of the mortgage.⁴⁰

§ 345. Breach of Collateral Agreement by Mortgagee

The breach of a collateral agreement by the mortgagee does not operate to release the mortgage lien.

A breach by the mortgagee of a contract independent of that evidenced by the mortgage does not operate to release the lien of the mortgage or to nullify its effect.⁴¹

§ 346. Assumption of Debt by Purchaser of Property

Assumption of the debt by a purchaser of the mortgaged property does not of itself discharge the lien of the mortgage.

The assumption of the mortgage debt by one who purchased the chattels from the mortgagor will not discharge the mortgage lien in the absence of an agreement or understanding that it shall be released.⁴²

§ 347. Release in General

In the absence of statute, a mortgage may be released expressly or impliedly without any particular formalities by the holder thereof or a receiver appointed thereunder; but the release must be supported by consideration.

Many of the rules governing the release of real estate mortgages, considered in the title Mortgages, are applicable to releases of chattel mortgages.⁴³ If the intent of parties in a particular agreement is to put an end to the lien, it will be effective although no formal release is executed.⁴⁴ Accordingly, a gaged property knew of the surrender, which was an oversight and without consideration.—Coombs v. Wilson, supra.

parol agreement for a release is sufficient, and no formal discharge need be executed⁴⁵ or recorded,⁴⁶ although the mortgage is under seal,⁴⁷ and the debt unpaid,⁴⁸ in the absence of statutes, such as those considered below in §§ 349, 350, requiring formalities of this character. Also, a mortgagee who has agreed to release the lien and extinguish the debt will not be permitted to take advantage of his failure to put the release in writing, in accordance with his agreement.⁴⁹

On the other hand, as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, there is no discharge of the mortgage where their actual intention, as manifested by their conduct, is to enforce the lien rather than to cancel it.⁵⁰ Likewise, a mortgage is not released by the release of another mortgage executed as a part of an independent transaction,⁵¹ and an apparent release which by mistake purports to release a mortgage does not have this effect where it would be inequitable and no new rights have been acquired on the strength thereof.⁵² Similarly, the fact that a mortgage is withdrawn by mistake from the register of deeds office does not constitute a satisfaction, in the absence of countervailing equities in the party who would gain by the satisfaction.⁵³

Also, to be valid a release must be supported by a consideration,⁵⁴ and it will not be conclusively presumed that there was a consideration for a cancellation under seal, where the cancellation need not be under seal.⁵⁵

Furthermore, if the release is conditional, it is not effective unless and until the conditions are performed.⁵⁶

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁵⁷ it has been held that a mortgage may be canceled by an implied agreement between the parties.⁵⁸ So, the mortgage lien may in effect be released by the mortgagee by the execution of a bond to the purchasers of the property, conditioned to secure them perfect title.⁵⁹

Sufficient consideration

(1) Transfer of automobile to authorized agent of finance company holding note of buyer secured by mortgage on automobile was sufficient consideration for release of balance due on note and mortgage.—Manufacturers' Finance Acceptance Corporation v. Autrey, 153 So. 181, 228 Ala. 149.

(2) An agreement under which the owner of the personal property was entitled to have the mortgage thereon released, in view of the evidence, was held to be supported by a sufficient consideration and was not merely an agreement to do that which the mortgagor was obligated to do.—Downey v. Gifford, 218 N.W. 488, 206 Iowa 848.

(3) Where the owner of cattle covered by a mortgage sold part of the cattle, accepting a part payment of one hundred fifty dollars, and the purchaser before delivery resold them to a third person, and it appeared that neither the original purchaser nor his vendee knew of the existence of the mortgage at the time of the sale but that on obtaining knowledge thereof they agreed with the mortgagee's agent that the proceeds on sale in a certain market should be paid to the mortgagee, who was thereupon to release the mortgage, the agreement for release was held to have been supported by a sufficient consideration. In this connection, it was held that the payment of the one hundred fifty dollars constituted at least a part of the consideration for the agreement, since, if the original purchasers had refused to carry it out in the event that the mortgagee should have insisted on its rights, it could have required the return of the payment, and the agreement deprived them of such right, and also because by the agreement the mortgagee, which was the real vendor, relinquished all its rights to such payment.—*Lee v. Conditions to be performed by purchaser or mortgagor

If the mortgagee agrees to release the property to a purchaser from the mortgagor on conditions to be performed by the purchaser, or by the mortgagor, of which the purchaser has knowledge, the release does not become effective, nor is the property discharged from the lien of the mortgage, unless and until performance is made of the conditions of the release.—Wilkins v. Friedman, supra.

Under tripartite agreement

Where mortgagor and mortgagee enter into tripartite agreement with third party, whereby among other terms the mortgagor was to sell and the mortgagee to release the mortgage to such third party, and this agreement could not be carried out and was abandoned, it was held that the goods were not released from the mortgage.—*Citizens' Nat. Where printed and typewritten clauses in a satisfaction of a mortgage are irreconcilable one with the other, the typewritten clause will prevail.⁶⁰

A provision in an agreement for the release of a mortgage requiring the owner of the mortgaged property to pay a specified sum, is effective where the parties have acted under it.⁶¹

Who may release. It is obvious that the holder of a deed of trust on personalty has the right to release the same,⁶² and a joint mortgage may be released by one of the mortgagees without the other's knowledge in order to permit a new mortgage consolidating prior mortgages to retain their priority.⁶³ Also, a surety has authority to release a mortgage executed to indemnify him from liability as indorser of certain notes, which release would be binding on bona fide purchasers of the notes who have made no claim to the property before the execution of such release;⁶⁴ and where one who has executed an accommodation note and taken a mortgage as security releases the mortgage, it is not necessary that the holder of the note should consent to the release.⁶⁵ Furthermore, a receiver appointed under a mortgage has authority to enter into an arrangement whereby a claim of the mortgagor for services shall be satisfied by a release of a portion of the property covered by the mortgage.⁶⁶

§ 348. Partial Release

A partial release is effective if supported by a sufficient consideration.

A partial release of the mortgaged property will be effective if it is supported by a sufficient consideration.⁶⁷

§ 349. Entry of Satisfaction

Where statutes so provide, a satisfaction or release of the mortgage must be entered of record in the manner prescribed.

Where there has been a payment or an accord and satisfaction of the entire debt secured by the mortgage, the debtor is entitled to have the fact of payment or satisfaction entered on the margin of the record of the mortgage.⁶⁸ In many jurisdictions the statutes require that the release or satisfaction of a mortgage shall be entered of record in order to make such release effective, whether the debt is paid in full or canceled by accord and satisfaction,⁶⁹ and, as is shown below in § 350, such statutes may impose a penalty on a mortgagee who neglects or refuses to make such entry. However, statutes of this character do not prevent the mortgagee from waiving the lien of his mortgage even though it remains unreleased of record.⁷⁰

A prior mortgage that has been paid but not canceled of record is of no effect as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and mortgagees.⁷¹

Where there is no statutory provision for recording, such a recording does not affect the rights of the parties.⁷²

Provision in mortgage that, if mortgagor defaulted and mortgagee repossessed chattel, mortgagor should have interest in chattel equal to fifty per cent of money he had paid, meant that mortgagor's interest in chattel would not be subject to foreclosure, and amounted to binding pro tanto release clause.—Snow v. Nowlin, 169 So. 598, 125 Fla. 166.

Release absolute

Receipt given mortgagor by mortgagee reading, "Received from D. chase and sale of land, was based on a sufficient consideration.—Ribelin v. Loyd, supra.

Where the statute provides that a mortgage may be discharged by an entry on the book kept by the township or city clerk, signed by the mortgagee or his personal representative, or assignee, acknowledging the satisfaction of the mortgage in the presence of such clerk, a discharge entered by the clerk which does not appear to be signed by the mortgagee or his personal representative or assignee will not defeat the mortgage lien.⁷⁵

§ 350. Penalties for Failure to Release or Enter Satisfaction

- a. Right of action and defenses
- b. Pleading
- c. Evidence
- d. Trial
- e. Damages or amount recoverable

a. Right of Action and Defenses

Under statutory authorization a mortgagor may recover damages or a penalty from the mortgagee for improperly failing or refusing to enter a satisfaction.

In some jurisdictions a mortgagor is authorized by statute to recover damages or a penalty for failure or refusal to enter satisfaction or record, where the mortgage has been paid or otherwise discharged; and such statute has been held constitutional,⁷⁶ and, being penal, should be strictly construed.⁷⁷ Some statutes of this character are not applicable to a mortgage which has been validly foreclosed, whether by judicial decree or under a power of sale.⁷⁸ Also, a statute providing a penalty for the failure to release a recorded mortgage does not apply to a chattel mortgage which is by law merely required to be filed,⁷⁹ or which has never been recorded as required by statute.⁸⁰

The right to a penalty of this character is not a mere personal right of the mortgagor,⁸¹ but is a right running with the property.⁸² Thus, the right of action arises only in favor of the owner of the mortgaged property at the time the cause of action accrues,⁸³ and against the mortgagee or his assignee of record.⁸⁴

In order to render the mortgagee or his assignee liable for failure to enter satisfaction, a proper request for such entry must be made,⁸⁵ accompanied by tender of the register's fee therefor if the statute so requires.⁸⁶ No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a sufficient demand or request; all that is necessary is that the words used in the request are such as shall reasonably inform the mortgagee, or his assignee, that entry of satisfaction is desired.⁸⁷ The general agent of a firm, even where he is outside the state,⁸⁸ is authorized to receive the written request for entry of satisfaction so as to render the firm liable for failure to make such entry.⁸⁹

The fact that the mortgagee is obligated to pay an indebtedness of the mortgagor not covered by the mortgage is no excuse for refusing to release the mortgage when satisfied,⁹⁰ and he cannot assign the

Sufficient notice

(1) A notice directing the satisfaction on the record of all recorded mortgages given by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, which have been paid, is sufficiently definite.—International Harvester Co. v. Simpson, 133 So. 4, 222 Ala. 493.

(2) Notice given by buyer of two trucks to seller, in connection with final payment on second truck, to "satisfy all records and mortgage" was sufficient, in buyer's action for penalty, as notice to satisfy record of purchase-money mortgage on first truck, where mortgage on first truck had been recorded and paid and mortgage on second truck was never recorded.—International Harvester Co. v. Fulmer, 166 So. 771, 232 Ala. 112.

Insufficient notice

(1) A notice "to take my note off the record" is not sufficient.—International Harvester Co. v. Simpson, 133 So. 4, 222 Ala. 493.

(2) Where two mortgages have been given by the mortgagor, a notice which refers to one mortgage only and fails to describe or refer to any certain mortgage is not sufficient to fasten the penalty on the mortgagee.—International Harvester Co. v. Simpson, supra.

mortgage after it has been paid, so as to avoid the duty to enter satisfaction;⁹¹ neither can he shift the burden to the mortgagor by requesting him to procure the doing of the act, and he has no right to presume from the mere silence of the mortgagor that he has gratuitously accepted and undertaken to execute the request so made of him.⁹² However, the relationship between the parties may be such that the silence of the mortgagor after he has been requested to file the release and give advice as to additional requirements will estop him from recovering the statutory penalty.⁹³

An entry of satisfaction after the expiration of the statutory period therefor,⁹⁴ or after the action to recover a penalty is commenced,⁹⁵ will not defeat the action; and it is no defense that the mortgagee, on receiving a request from the mortgagor to satisfy the mortgage, directed the judge of probate by letter to enter satisfaction.⁹⁶ Also, mortgagees who expressly place their refusal to enter satisfaction on other grounds cannot defeat an action against them for the statutory penalty on the ground that the mortgagor did not tender a satisfaction piece already prepared for execution, or tender the fees of the register for entering satisfaction.⁹⁷ However, it has been held that the refusal of the mortgagee to satisfy the mortgage must be intentional and willful in order to render him liable for the penalty, and the mortgagee is not liable when the right of the person demanding satisfaction is in doubt, and the refusal to enter satisfaction is made in good faith and in the honest belief that the mortgage is not entitled to be discharged;⁹⁸ nor can a mortgagee be mulcted in damages for failure or refusal to release a mortgage, where he in good faith disputes the validity of another claim not connected with the obligation to secure which the mortgage is given which it is sought to compel him to accept as a part payment of the amount due.⁹⁹ Also, a tender of the amount due, although the money be brought into court with the suit to recover a penalty, is not such a satisfaction of the mortgage as will render the mortgagee liable for failure or refusal to satisfy.¹

Statute not applicable to conditional sale notes. It has been held that a statute providing that conditional sale notes, when deposited with the register of deeds, shall be subject to the law applicable to the filing of chattel mortgages does not render such notes when filed subject to the law providing penalties for failure to satisfy chattel mortgages.²

b. Pleading

General rules govern the pleadings in actions of this character.

A complaint in an action for a penalty is sufficient where it identifies the mortgage by date, alleges payment thereof, stating the amount if the payment is a partial one, and avers a written request to the mortgagee to satisfy the mortgage, and his failure so to do within the time required by law.³ Such a complaint must allege full payment or satisfaction of the mortgage debt,⁴ and is subject to demurrer where it alleges an antedated payment.⁵ A petition is sufficient, although it fails to allege the amount of the mortgage debt, where it is otherwise sufficiently identified.⁶ The declaration may properly join in one count a claim for the penalty and for all damages occasioned by the mortgagee's neglect,⁷ and several counts for separate penalties for such neglect in regard to different mortgages may be joined.⁸

In an action of the character under discussion, a plea which proceeds on the theory of fraud and estoppel is not necessarily subject to demurrer,⁹ but, where the complaint does not allege the exact date when the mortgage was paid, but merely shows that it had been paid when the request to enter satisfaction was made, a plea averring that at the time plaintiff made the request defendant did not own the mortgage but had transferred it to a third person is demurrable, because not alleging a transfer of the mortgage by defendant prior to its payment.¹⁰

Issues, proof, and variance. Where the issue is raised by the pleadings, plaintiff may introduce evidence as to either payment of the debt or accord and satisfaction.¹¹ A slight variance between the date of the mortgage note as alleged in the complaint and that stated in the mortgage will not render the mortgage inadmissible in evidence.¹²

c. Evidence

General rules apply to the evidence in actions of this character.

In an action for a penalty for failure to release a mortgage, the burden of proof rests on plaintiff as to all issues raised by the complaint, and replications to the pleas, including full payment or satisfaction of the mortgage debt.¹³ However, if the mortgagee, in an action against him for failure to enter a partial payment, sets up by special plea that at the time the request was made the mortgage had been fully satisfied, the burden is on him to prove such allegation, and, if he fails to discharge that burden, plaintiff is entitled to recover.¹⁴

The general rules as to the competency and relevancy of evidence are applicable to actions for these statutory penalties. It has been held that the mortgagee cannot introduce his own ex parte statements on the issue as to whether the mortgage had been satisfied.¹⁵ Evidence of usury in the mortgage note is admissible as bearing on the question of whether the amount legally due had been paid before defendant was called on to discharge the mortgage,¹⁶ and the original mortgage on which partial payments were made is admissible;¹⁷ also, plaintiff may introduce in evidence the written request served on defendant,¹⁸ and testimony by a person employed by the mortgagee as a bookkeeper that, after receiving notice to enter satisfaction, he wrote to the judge of probate was admissible in the mortgagor's behalf, where the mortgagor afterward testified that the mortgagee admitted to him that he had received the notice, and had requested the bookkeeper to write the judge to satisfy the mortgage on the record.¹⁹

General rules governing the sufficiency of evidence are also applicable.²⁰

d. Trial

General rules apply to the trial of actions of this character.

It is the province of the jury to determine questions of fact, and, if there is evidence supporting a plea that the parties had entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff released his claim for damages, it is error to withdraw the question of such agreement from the jury;²¹ but the construction of the statute giving a right of action for failure to enter satisfaction is one of law for the court, and should not be submitted to the jury.²² Instructions applicable to the evidence and otherwise correct should be given on request,²³ but it is proper to refuse instructions which are argumentative or which emphasize a particular phase of the evidence.²⁴

e. Damages or Amount Recoverable

Under proper pleading and proof, actual damages, or the penalty prescribed by statute, may be recovered from the mortgagee for failure to release or enter satisfaction of the mortgage.

Where an action is brought by the mortgagor for the penalty presented by statute for failure to enter satisfaction of a mortgage, no actual damages need be proved,²⁵ but the fixing of a definite sum as a penalty does not prevent recovery of such damages as were the natural result of the mortgagee's omission to enter satisfaction of the mortgage.²⁶ Such damages, however, must be proved,²⁷ and a judg-

For rejection of application for loan

Where recovery from the mortgagee is sought on the basis of damages resulting from the refusal of a land bank to grant a loan because of unreleased mortgages on record, plaintiff must show that the mortgagee's neglect to release the mortgages of record caused the re-

ment for damages for failure to satisfy a mortgage within the statutory time cannot stand where predicated upon the mistaken premise that the notes securing the mortgage were paid.²⁸

If the action is framed under a clause in a statute allowing recovery of actual damages, plaintiff will be limited to such sum as will fully compensate him for his injury, and it cannot be increased by awarding punitive or exemplary damages;²⁹ and it has been held that exemplary damages beyond the amount of the penalty are not recoverable in a suit for the penalty.³⁰

In case there is no proof of actual damage and liability for punitive or penal damages is barred by the statute of limitations, plaintiff is entitled only to nominal damages.³¹

Pleading damages. Under an allegation of "other damages," a mortgagor cannot recover for his time and expense in going to a third person, falsely stated by the mortgagee to have the mortgage in his possession, to ascertain whether it had been discharged, as such damages are recoverable, if at all, only on a special allegation.³²

§ 351. Effect of Release or Satisfaction

Although generally a mortgage is not enforceable after it has been released or satisfied, the effect of a release or satisfaction entered depends on the character of the rights claimed thereunder, and the release or satisfaction may not be conclusive evidence of payment or discharge.

The effect of a release of a mortgage depends to some extent on the character of the right that is claimed under it.³³ Thus a subsequent purchaser of the property who has relied on a release of record is protected by it as against a subsequent assignee of the mortgagee's interest,³⁴ but a release intended merely to facilitate a renewal of the mortgage will not protect a person who, without the knowledge of the mortgagee, takes the property while it is subject to the mortgage, and then claims that the mortgagee lost his lien by the release.³⁵ On the satisfaction of a first mortgage, a second mortgage on the same property becomes a first lien.³⁶

The facts that a mortgagee executed a written agreement to discharge a mortgage and that a marginal note to this effect was made by the recording officer are sufficient to warrant a finding that there has been a bona fide discharge;³⁷ but the execution and filing of a release are not conclusive evidence that the mortgage has been paid or discharged,³⁸ and it may be shown by parol that the release was entered without authority,³⁹ or by mistake;⁴⁰ and a direct proceeding to impeach the entry of satisfaction is not required as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee.⁴¹ Recitals in releases to the effect that they are made because of the payment of the debt are no more conclusive than the recital of payment in a receipt or the recital of consideration in a deed, and at most they are only admissions of payment that do not preclude plaintiff from showing that the debt was not in fact paid.⁴²

The mortgagee cannot enforce his lien against the mortgagor where, for a full and fair consideration, he has agreed to release the mortgagor and look to another for payment of the indebtedness.⁴³ Likewise, a mortgagee who has received other property under an agreement to release the mortgaged property in consideration thereof will be estopped to retain the property so received, and also to assert the mortgage lien against the property agreed to be released;⁴⁴ and, where a purchaser of mortgaged property informs the mortgagee of his purchase, giving a description of the property purchased, and the mortgagee, after ascertaining from what he deems a reliable source the extent of his interest in such property, releases it from the mortgage and receives the consideration agreed to be paid for such portion, he will be estopped to assert a further lien.⁴⁵

When two persons have separate mortgage liens on personal property, the fact that one of them releases his lien does not destroy the lien of the other.⁴⁶ Also, where a third person has assumed the mortgage indebtedness, a release of the mortgagor from personal liability does not discharge the debt or release the mortgage.⁴⁷

The mortgagee is not liable to an attaching creditor who has become subrogated to his rights in the mortgage for illegally canceling it, unless it is shown that he was damaged thereby.⁴⁸

Release obtained by fraud. Fraudulent misrepresentations on the part of the mortgagor in obtaining the release will justify its cancellation.⁴⁹ However, misrepresentation in regard to the value of property from which a mortgage has been released does not afford a ground for canceling the release, since the statements of value were mere opinions on which the mortgagee was not justified in relying.⁵⁰

Satisfaction entered by mistake. Where a mortgage is satisfied by mistake,⁵¹ or without the knowledge of any intervening change in the title,⁵² as against a person who has acquired no intermediate right on the faith of the satisfaction courts of equity will restore the lien of such mortgage;⁵³ also, if entry of satisfaction on the margin of the record is made by mistake, the mortgagee may revoke it at any time before it is known to the mortgagor, and may show, in an action brought against him for taking the goods under his mortgage, that the mortgage debt was never paid, that the entry of satisfaction was made by mistake, and that he canceled it before the mortgagor learned of its existence;⁵⁴ and such cancellation will also be effectual as against the assignee of the mortgaged property who had no knowledge of the mistaken entry.⁵⁵ On the other hand, where a third person relies on the release, the mortgagee is estopped to dispute its validity, although it was in fact executed without consideration.⁵⁶

The fact that a register of deeds inadvertently causes a purported satisfaction of a first mortgage to be filed does not give priority to a second mortgagee whose position has not been changed thereby.⁵⁷ Likewise, the balance due on a mortgage note may be recovered, although by mistake a marginal entry has been made on the record of the mortgage to the effect that it has been fully paid, satisfied, and discharged.⁵⁸

Partial release. Where, before the execution of a second renewal mortgage on the same property, the parties agree by parol that the mortgagor may dispose of a part of the property free from mortgage liens, and he does so, the rights acquired by third persons to such released property are unaffected by the renewal mortgage;⁵⁹ and, where the mortgaged property exceeds the amount of the debt, the mortgagee cannot release a portion of the property for the mortgagor's benefit and assert his lien thereon against a subsequent attaching creditor.⁶⁰ Where a mortgage constitutes a second lien on the property mortgaged, it cannot be displaced by the act of the first lienor in releasing his lien as to a portion of the property covered;⁶¹ and, where a prior mortgagee, for the purpose of depriving a junior mortgagee of his security, fraudulently releases that portion of the property on which the prior mortgage is the exclusive lien, he will not be permitted to satisfy his mortgage out of the property covered by the junior mortgage.⁶²

§ 352. Revival of Mortgage after Payment or Cancellation

A mortgage cannot be revived after it has been paid and surrendered to the mortgagor.

A mortgage cannot be revived after the mortgage note has been paid and the mortgage surrendered to the mortgagor by the redelivery of the instrument to the mortgagee on the occasion of his making a new loan.⁶³ Where an original mortgage, contain-

§ 353. Evidence of Payment or Release

Proof of payment or release is governed by the general rules pertaining to presumptions, burden of proof, admissibility, and sufficiency of evidence.

Presumptions and burden of proof. Where the mortgage is in the possession of the mortgagee uncanceled, it is presumed to be unpaid.⁶⁵ The production of the mortgage note by the mortgagee at the trial of an action of replevin brought by him is prima facie evidence that the note has not been paid.⁶⁶ On the other hand, payment may be presumed from a considerable lapse of time after the maturity of the debt.⁶⁷ Also, possession of the mortgage and the mortgage note, by the mortgagor, after maturity, is prima facie evidence that the mortgage has been paid, although no entry of satisfaction was made on the record.⁶⁸ Where a mortgagee, who has exercised his right to take possession of the property on the maturity of the indebtedness subsequently delivers it to the mortgagor, this furnishes prima facie evidence that the mortgage is satisfied,⁶⁹ but any presumption of payment arising from possession of the property may be overcome by evidence that the mortgagor acquired possession without the mortgagee's knowledge or consent.⁷⁰

The burden of proving payment or discharge of the mortgage is on the party asserting it.⁷¹ So, in an action to foreclose an uncanceled mortgage, the burden is on defendant to prove payment, where he asserts it as a defense.⁷² Also, where the mortgagor claims that payment was effected by a transfer to the mortgage holder of something other than money, the burden rests on him to show that this was accepted as payment,⁷³ in accordance with the rules considered in the C.J.S. title Payment § 96, also 48 C.J. p 684 note 65.

Unauthorized surrender of instrument

The fact that a bond and mortgage, found among the papers of the mortgagee after his death, were surrendered to the mortgagor by a person who, although thereafter appointed administrator, had at the time of the surrender no authority to represent the estate, does not weaken the presumption, raised by the mortgagee's possession of the papers, that they are still valid and unpaid.—Fitzmahony v. On second mortgage

Where second mortgagee contended that first had been satisfied and that he was entitled to priority in application of proceeds of sale of the mortgaged chattels, it was held that he had the burden of proof.—Nicholson v. Bynum, 162 P. 740, 62 Okl. 167.

In detinue for mortgaged property, where defendant pleaded payment, the burden of proof was on him to establish such plea. — Howell v. Smith, 91 So. 496, 206 Ala. 646.

In replevin against mortgaged property where the defense was that the mortgage was paid, the burden was held to be on defendant mortgagor to prove payment by preponderance of evidence. — Mitchell v. Hammett, 60 S.W.2d 559, 187 Ark. 1163.

In action to recover credit due mortgagor

To recover amount held by finance company under contract, in legal effect a mortgage, providing that amount withheld would be paid to dealer when contracts covering automobiles were paid in full, automobile dealer would be required to allege and prove that amount claimed had actually accrued under contract and that demand had been made therefor. — Lindsey v. Plaintiff not bound to prove nonpayment

In suit to obtain adjudication that written instruments constituted mortgage and for foreclosure thereof, where instruments sued on created obligation for payment of money, within Civ.Pract.Act § 242, it was error to hold that plaintiffs were bound to prove nonpayment to establish cause of action.—Walsh v. Gray, supra.

In suit on note secured by chattel mortgage, mortgagor who claims to have discharged debt by delivering mortgaged property to mortgagee has burden of proving that mortgagee accepted property in satisfaction of debt.—Riley Motor Co. v. Wilkins, supra.

In suit to enforce mortgage

Purchaser, in seller's suit to enforce mortgage had burden of proving that seller repossessed automobile without purchaser's consent and accepted it in settlement of purchaser's debt sued on.—Bernstein-Lanford, Inc., v. Tieuel, La.App., 144 So. 195.

Admissibility of evidence. Evidence which bears on payment of the mortgage is relevant and admissible, if otherwise competent,⁷⁴ in accordance with the principles considered in the C.J.S. title Payment § 112, also 48 C.J. p 717 note 93.

Payment of the mortgage debt may be proved by a bill of sale of cattle to the mortgagee, the proceeds of which cattle were to be credited on the mortgage, and by the fact that the mortgagee has subsequently sold cattle.⁷⁵

In an action by the assignee of a mortgagor against the mortgagee for conversion, where the issue is whether there was a default in payment, evidence that the assignee agreed to pay to prevent removal of the property, if the mortgagee would give him time to draw the money from the bank, is admissible only as a part of the res gestæ, and it is error to permit the assignee to follow it up by other evidence showing the amount of his bank account;⁷⁶ and on an issue as to whether, prior to the execution of a renewal mortgage, the parties agreed by parol to release a portion of the property from the lien of the first mortgage, the renewal mortgage and a pencil memorandum of the alleged parol agreement are admissible, the inferences deducible from the difference in the language of the two mortgages, and whether any memorandum was ever written, and, if written, what it contained, being questions for the jury.⁷⁷

Sufficiency of evidence. General rules governing weight and sufficiency control in determining whether the evidence is sufficient to show that the mortgage debt has or has not been paid or released,⁷⁸ or to support a judgment,⁷⁹ finding,⁸⁰ or ver-

Testimony as to receipt of rents

In bank's action on notes executed by farm tenant as maker and landlord as surety, which notes were secured by a mortgage on maker's crops, wherein maker testified that all crops were sold and proceeds delivered to bank for purpose of calculating amount of rent due, testimony of surety as to amount of rent received by him during years involved was admissible as circumstance to show amount of payments received by bank on notes.—*Brand v. 79. Evidence insufficient

(1) To justify judgment for mortgagor in detinue action on ground that mortgage under which property sued for was claimed had been satisfied by seizure of certain of mortgagor's property sold by mortgagee for much less than amount of mortgage debt.—Williams v. Love, 166 So. 681, 232 Ala. 31.

(1) To support finding that mortgage note was paid, so as to make mortgagee's seizure of chattels a conversion.—Woods Leasing Co. v. Funcheon, 25 P.2d 47, 134 Cal.App. 111.

(2) To support finding of agreement whereby mortgagee was to accept all property and possession of premises in complete settlement of mortgage debt, in action on agreement whereby mortgagee was to take over designated property and credit dict⁸¹ to the effect that there has or has not been such payment or release. Payment must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence.⁸² The mere acceptance by a mortgagee of property other than that mortgaged, and the crediting of the same, at an agreed price, on the mortgage, do not show an agreement to release the mortgaged property.⁸³ Payment of a large amount over the mortgage debt will, however, authorize a finding that the mortgage has been paid.⁸⁴

XIV. FORECLOSURE

A. IN GENERAL

§ 354. Necessity of Foreclosure

The foreclosure of a chattel mortgage is ordinarily necessary in order to cut off and transfer the mortgagor's interest in the mortgaged property; however, it is unnecessary if the mortgagor, after a default, delivers the property to the mortgagee in satisfaction of the mortgage debt.

At common law, on the breach of a condition of a chattel mortgage, an absolute title to the mortgaged chattels vested in the mortgagee without a foreclosure, as shown infra § 432. Under the modern rule, however, courts of equity interfere to give the mortgagor a right of redemption, as will be discussed in § 432, particularly since in many jurisdictions a chattel mortgage creates merely a lien on the property, as already discussed in § 1. Accordingly, a foreclosure, either in accordance with the terms of the mortgage,⁸⁵ or in the manner prescribed by law,⁸⁶ is ordinarily necessary today, the function of a foreclosure being officially to declare a forfeiture of the mortgagor's interest and to transfer it to another.⁸⁷ However, foreclosure is unnecessary where the mortgagor, after default, delivers the property to the mortgagee in satisfaction of the mortgage debt.⁸⁸

Unless the circumstances are such that the right to foreclose is granted or denied by statute, the circumstances under which a right to foreclose a chattel mortgage arises depend on the intention of the parties to the mortgage.

Except in particular circumstances in which a right to foreclose may be created⁸⁹ or denied⁹⁰ by a statute, or be denied because of equitable considerations,⁹¹ the circumstances under which a right to foreclose arises depend on the intention of the parties as expressed in the mortgage,⁹² although to defendant on the mortgage debt for the fair value thereof.—Horst v. Staley, 54 P.2d 876, 101 Mont. 543.

(3) To support finding that note secured by mortgage had been paid, in an action on the note.—First Nat. Bank v. Morris, Tex.Civ.App., 94 S. W.2d 867.

81. Evidence sufficient

(1) To sustain verdict finding balance remained yet unpaid, in action to foreclose mortgage on crop and personalty.—Callaway v. Dozier, 166 S.E. 254, 45 Ga.App. 865.

(2) Evidence of payment of balance alleged to be due on note for piano was held to be sufficient to support verdict for defendant in replevin.—Æolian Co. of Missouri v. Annis, Mo.App., 272 S.W. 1031.

determine the intention of the parties in this respect it is permissible to construe the mortgage in connection with other instruments executed at the same time.⁹³ Particular circumstances in which the right to foreclose may exist are discussed infra §§ 356, 357, and 360.

The right to foreclose is not affected by the fact that the mortgagor, with the mortgagee's knowledge, has relinquished control of the property to a third person for a definite period,⁹⁴ or that the mortgagee's interest in the property is only a partial one;⁹⁵ nor is it affected by the fact that the mortgagee is indebted to the mortgagor, if such indebtedness has no connection with, or is insufficient entirely to wipe out, the mortgage debt.⁹⁶ So also, the right to foreclose is unaffected by controversies between the mortgagor and third persons concerning matters as to which the mortgagee is a stranger.⁹⁷ However, where the mortgagee has been summoned as a trustee in attachment, the mortgage cannot thereafter be foreclosed,⁹⁸ although an invalid attachment does not prevent foreclosure.⁹⁹

A mortgage may properly be foreclosed after the death of the mortgagor, and the mortgagee need not file his claim against the estate in probate.¹

Where the mortgagee has seized the property for his own use, rather than for the protection of his security, the mortgage debt is satisfied, as shown supra § 342, to the extent of the value of the property, and the mortgagee cannot maintain an action to foreclose the lien on such property, but if he has seized only a part of the property he may foreclose the mortgage on the property remaining in the possession of the mortgagor.²

On conversion. It has been held that where the mortgaged property has been converted by a third person, the holder of the mortgage may proceed to foreclose the mortgage on the property in the hands of such person.³

Counterclaim. Where a counterclaim is set up by the mortgagor to an action by the mortgagee to recover the mortgage debt and to foreclose the mortgage, the mortgage may be foreclosed for the amount of the debt, subject to a set-off for the amount of any claim established by the mortgagor.⁴ Also, where a chattel mortgage is given to secure future advances totaling a specified sum, but only a portion of such amount is advanced, the mortgagee may nevertheless foreclose the mortgage for the amount due, subject to a set-off for any damages which the mortgagor may have suffered by reason of the mortgagee's failure to advance the whole sum.⁵

§ 356. — Maturity of Debt

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a mortgage conditioned on the payment of a debt on a day certain cannot be foreclosed before that date.

In the absence of circumstances giving rise to a statutory right to foreclosure where the condition of the mortgage is the payment of a debt on a day certain, a right to foreclose does not exist prior thereto.⁶ On the other hand, where no time for payment of the debt is specified,⁷ or where the debt is past due at the time the mortgage is executed,⁸ the mortgage may be foreclosed immediately on delivery. However, it has generally been held that there must be a demand and refusal to pay,⁹ even

Foreclosure as terminating contract

An attempt by the mortgagee to foreclose the mortgage in violation of the terms of an agreement entered into in connection with the mortgage at the time of the execution of the latter has been held to entitle the mortgagor to treat the agreement as at an end.—Woodbridge v. Wolf, 149 N.E. 685, 254 Mass. 128.

Renewal as waiver by mortgagor

As respects right to foreclose, an objection that the mortgagee did not properly apply a check given to him on his promise to give an extension of time is waived by the mortgagor's subsequent signing of an extension or renewal note.—Davenport v. San

Preserving lien against third parties

Where a mortgage note has no due date, the mortgagee, to preserve his lien against another encumbran-

where the mortgage contains an express agreement to pay at maturity.¹⁰

Renewal. Although by the terms of the mortgage the mortgagor may renew the debt and mortgage at maturity if he pays the interest, a mere payment of the interest when due will not constitute a renewal of the mortgage so as to prevent foreclosure.¹¹

§ 357. — Default in Payment or Performance of Condition

The right to foreclose a chattel mortgage arises usually on a default in payment or the performance of any other condition in the mortgage.

The right to foreclose a chattel mortgage usually arises on a default in the payment of the mortgage debt,¹² or the performance of any other condition named in the mortgage,¹³ and a default occurs immediately on the mortgagor's failure to perform his obligation strictly according to the tenor of the mortgage.¹⁴ Conversely, in the absence of an express agreement by the mortgagor, or a provision of a statute, to other effect, no right to foreclose exists ordinarily prior to, or in the absence of, a default.¹⁵ A mortgagor is not in default, so as to authorize a foreclosure, where it is possible that his obligation will be,¹⁶ or that it is being,¹⁷ or that it has been,¹⁸ performed in accordance with the terms of the mortgage. Where the mortgage is conditioned on the payment of a note, the mortgage and

(2) However, according to other authority, a sale or other disposition of the property by the mortgagor in violation of the terms of the mortgage does not authorize an executory process before maturity, in the absence of an express provision in the mortgage to the contrary.—Hopkins v. (3) Option to foreclose on sale or disposition see infra § 360 a.

Failure to insure

The failure of a mortgagor to exercise due diligence in procuring insurance for the property as required by the terms of the mortgage has been held to constitute a default. Thus the mortgagor was in default where, although he had applied therefor on the date the mortgage was executed, the insurance was not issued until more than two months afterward.—Lawlor v. Dowd, 130 N. E. 103, 237 Mass. 569.

16. Mortgagor's option

Where by the terms of the mortgage, payment may be made in accordance with either of two plans, the mortgagee cannot foreclose merely on a failure to make payment in accordance with one plan, where payment in accordance with the other plan is still possible.—Glaspie v. Williams, 51 P.2d 254, 46 Ariz. 381.

17. Mo.—Stockham v. Leach, 238 S. W. 853, 210 Mo.App. 407.

Performance of services

Where the mortgagor's obligation is to render services specified in a contract entered into in connection with the mortgage, the mortgagor is not in default, so as to authorize foreclosure, so long as the contract is being performed, even though a note payable by the performance of such services is due.—Stockham v. Leach, supra.

Action held premature

Where, irrespective of whether a warehouse receipt sought to be foreclosed as a chattel mortgage was delivered to secure the repayment of money, a part of the money was to be paid by the defendant from certain contracts with a third person, and such payments were then being made, an action as to such part was prematurely brought. — Stultz v. Gamble, 180 N.Y.S. 424.

18. N.Y.—Wazen v. Duggan, 186 N. Y.S. 394, affirmed 188 N.Y.S. 956, 197 App.Div. 922.

Wrongful application of payment

Where mortgagors had paid enough to discharge the mortgage, but the mortgagees, contrary to the mortgage terms, applied such payments on another debt, a foreclosure sale for default of payment was void as to mortgagors' trustee in bankruptcy.—Simpson v. Combes, 182 P. 566, 107 Wash. 575.

note must be read together in determining whether there has been a breach of the condition,¹⁹ and payment of the note in accordance with the terms thereof constitutes a performance of the condition of the mortgage.²⁰

Even where there has been a breach of a condition of the mortgage, it has been held that the mortgage cannot be foreclosed where to permit a foreclosure would be inequitable.²¹

In the absence of other existing liens on the mortgaged property, a mortgagor may surrender it to the mortgagee and authorize its sale and the application of the proceeds to the mortgage debt, although no default has occurred in the terms of the mortgage,²² and a foreclosure before default cannot be impeached by inferior lienholders if the value of the mortgaged goods is less than the debt secured by the mortgage to plaintiff.²³ Moreover, even an unauthorized foreclosure before a default,²⁴ or the time specified for foreclosure in the mortgage,²⁵ if not objected to by the mortgagor, is valid as against the mortgagor's general creditors.

Redelivery of possession. If a default occurs while the mortgagee holds temporary possession, he need not go through the form of delivery back to the mortgagor before asserting his right.²⁶

§ 358. — Persons Entitled to Foreclose

The mortgagee or persons having acquired sufficient interest therein or acting as representative of the mortgagee may foreclose the mortgage.

Where a mortgage is given to several persons jointly to secure separate debts, either mortgagee may enforce his own claim by foreclosure,²⁷ or the mortgage may be foreclosed by the mortgagees jointly.²⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that a mortgage given to several persons to secure a single debt cannot be foreclosed by one of them,²⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.³⁰

Parties to assignment. An assignee of the mortgage may foreclose it,³¹ as may an assignee of a part of the mortgage debt,³² unless by its terms the mortgage confers a right of foreclosure on the mortgagee only.³³ If the mortgage itself is assigned, the assignee acquires the legal title and may enforce the mortgage in his own name;³⁴ but even where the assignment is only an equitable one, the assignee has a right to use the name of the holder of the legal title to enforce the mortgage at law.³⁵ Where, although the mortgage and the note had been assigned, they were in the mortgagee's possession at the time of the foreclosure, and the mortgagor recognized the mortgagee as the owner, a foreclosure by the mortgagee was held to be proper.³⁶

Parties to suretyship agreement. A surety to whom a mortgage has been given as indemnity cannot foreclose it, in the absence of an express provision therein to the contrary, until he has paid the debt or some part thereof;³⁷ nor can he foreclose after having been discharged as a surety.³⁸ The

20. Deposit as payment

Where a note is payable at a particular time and at a particular trust company, and the mortgage securing the note is by its terms conditioned on the payment of such note, the mortgagor is not in default, so as to authorize a foreclosure, where on maturity he has on deposit with the trust company a sum exceeding the note, with instructions to pay the note upon presentment, and the mortgagee fails to make presentment at such place.—Wazen v. Duggan, 188 N.Y.S. 394, affirmed 188 N.Y.S. 956, 197 App.Div. 922.

21. Execution of second mortgage

The execution of a second mortgage by the mortgagor, especially where such mortgage has been canceled of record, will not entitle the holder of the first mortgage to foreclose the latter, despite an agreement therein by the mortgagee not to create another mortgage or lien on the property, since the second mortgage can in no way affect the lien of the first, and to permit such a foreclosure would be inequitable.—Dichter v. Nagle, N.J.Ch., 113 A. 519.

creditor may enforce such a mortgage in equity,³⁹ and where one agreeing to pay a debt owing to a third person takes a chattel mortgage as security, the mortgage may be enforced in equity by the person whose debt it is agreed shall be paid.⁴⁰

A trustee named in a chattel mortgage as the mortgagee is a proper person to foreclose the mortgage;⁴¹ but he cannot foreclose in order to be paid his claim for services rendered in administering the trust where he never performed services as such trustee under the mortgage.⁴² Where the trustee is a mere nominal one, he is a mere agent of the creditor, and the latter may maintain a suit to foreclose in his own name,⁴³ but if there has been an agreement, express or implied, that the trustee shall have entire discretionary powers as to the manner of handling the trust, and he has refused to foreclose, the creditor is not entitled so to do.⁴⁴ Under a statute to that effect, where a trustee named in a deed of trust cannot act because of unforeseen circumstances, the deed may be enforced by a substitute trustee appointed by the court.⁴⁵

Personal representative. On the death of the mortgagee, an action to foreclose should be brought by his personal representatives, not by the heir.⁴⁶

A junior mortgagee may bring an action of foreclosure against the mortgagor, and may make prior mortgagees parties thereto,⁴⁷ or, if the mortgaged property is in the possession of a senior mortgagee, may maintain an action of foreclosure against the senior mortgagee.⁴⁸ However, a junior mortgagee must establish as against a senior mortgagee,⁴⁹ at least if the latter is rightfully in possession of the property,⁵⁰ that the junior mortgagee has a substantial, and not merely a nominal, interest in the property. Thus, if the value of the mortgaged property is such that the proceeds of a sale thereof would not exceed the amount due under the prior mortgage, a junior mortgagee cannot foreclose until he has procured a discharge of the prior mortgage by paying the prior mortgagee the amount due the latter under his mortgage.⁵¹ On the other hand, if the proceeds of a sale of the property would be sufficient to satisfy the senior mortgage and leave a surplus, a junior mortgagee may foreclose his mortgage and apply the surplus on his own debt.⁵² Also, it has been held that a junior encumbrancer may exercise his legal right to foreclose without liability to other encumbrancers in case he subjects only the interest of the mortgagor.⁵³

The assignee of a junior chattel mortgage may seize and sell the property for the debt represented thereby, subject to the interest of the senior mortgage, and free from interference by anyone not having a prior claim.⁵⁴

Bill to compel foreclosure. A subsequent mortgagee of a part of the property embraced in a prior mortgage may, after exhausting all his other securities without satisfaction, file a bill in equity against the prior mortgagee for the purpose of subjecting such property by compelling the latter to foreclose, and to resort first to the other property embraced in his mortgage.⁵⁵

§ 359. — Waiver of Default or Right to Foreclose

A waiver of default or of a right to foreclose may be effected by an express agreement or by any other unequivocal act by the mortgagee to that end, or by his acquiescence in the breach.

A waiver of default or of a right to foreclose a chattel mortgage may be effected by an express agreement,⁵⁶ or by any other unequivocal act⁵⁷

to that end by the mortgagee, or it may be effected by his acquiescence in the breach.⁵⁸ An express agreement in writing is not necessary therefor.⁵⁹ Accordingly, the right to foreclose may be lost by an extension of the indebtedness,⁶⁰ by a sale of the mortgaged chattels with the mortgagee's permission and the application of the proceeds on the mortgaged debt,⁶¹ by a destruction of the chattels,⁶² or by a wrongful conversion thereof by plaintiff.⁶³

On the other hand, the right to foreclose is not lost by an agreement on the part of the mortgagee to postpone foreclosure proceedings,⁶⁴ by an abandonment of foreclosure proceedings prior to a final adjudication,⁶⁵ by an agreement to accept payment of the mortgage debt in a particular manner,⁶⁶ by an execution to the mortgagor of an escrow deed to the mortgaged property for the purpose of a levy and sale,⁶⁷ by an acceptance of rent for the use of the property by a lessee thereof,⁶⁸ by secretly taking a new mortgage in place of a prior unrecorded mortgage,⁶⁹ by waiving the right to enforce a pledge securing the same debt,⁷⁰ or by a purchase by the mortgagee of part of the chattels included in the mortgage.⁷¹ An agreement by one of two joint mortgagees not to foreclose after a default in the payment of an installment does not bind his comortgagee and prevent the latter from foreclosing on such a default.⁷²

Even after the mortgagee has elected to declare a forfeiture, he may waive his election; but it has been held that an election to declare the whole debt due on a default in the payment of interest is not waived by his subsequent acceptance of the interest.⁷³

§ 360. Option to Foreclose

- a. Before default
- b. On partial default

a. Before Default

Where the mortgage itself or a statute so provides, the mortgagee may have an option to foreclose before a default has taken place.

An option to foreclose a chattel mortgage before a default may be conferred by a provision in the mortgage or a statute giving the mortgagee a right to foreclose at such time as he chooses,⁷⁴ or, in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁷⁵ by a provision in the mortgage authorizing him to foreclose at any time he feels insecure.⁷⁶ However, it is

S.D.—Hesnard v. Larive, 184 N.W. 972, 45 S.D. 19.

Acceptance of payment after default as waiver of forfeiture see supra § 330.

Demand for payment

(1) A right to foreclose may be waived by a demand for payment after the mortgage is overdue. Me.—Greene v. Dingley, 24 Me. 131. N.Y.—Van Loan v. Willis, 13 Daly 281.

(2) Such a demand, however, does not reinvest the mortgagor with title to the property.

S.C.—Hale v. Utsey, 22 S.E. 371, 44 S.C. 393.

Failure to make timely claim

A right to foreclose on a default in the performance of a condition named in the mortgage is waived where, although the mortgagee himself performed the condition, he failed to make a timely claim for reimbursement therefor, and instead of reimbursing himself from payments made by the mortgagor applied such payments on a debt not yet due.—Hesnard v. Larive, 184 N.W. 972, 45 S.D. 19.

Interest

Where the mortgagee feels insecure, he is entitled to have debt matured, and to foreclose the mortgage without any deduction of interest from face of note, notwithstanding that note did not draw interest until after due.—Lee v. Walmsley, 240 P. 906, 136 Wash. 573.

generally held that an option to foreclose whenever the mortgagee feels insecure cannot be exercised arbitrarily, but only in good faith and when he has reasonable grounds to believe himself insecure;⁷⁷ although it is sufficient in some jurisdictions if the mortgagee in fact believes himself insecure, without regard to the grounds for such belief.⁷⁸ Likewise, under a clause in the mortgage or a statute so providing, the mortgagee may foreclose the mortgage, although no default in payment has occurred, if the mortgagor destroys, removes, or disposes of the property, or attempts to do so,⁷⁹ or where the property has unreasonably depreciated in value.⁸⁰ Also, where the mortgage so provides, the mortgagee may declare a default if the property be used for unlawful purposes, but no default may be declared under such a provision in the absence of some actual evidence of illegal use.⁸¹

On the other hand, the mortgagee cannot be compelled to exercise the option, since it is for his benefit.⁸² The right to foreclose a mortgage before a default in payment is separate and distinct from, and not dependent on the exercise of, the right to take possession of the property.⁸³

Where an option to foreclose before default is exercised in a proper manner, neither the mortgagee, if the proceeds did not exceed his debt, nor the purchaser of the mortgaged property is liable to a subsequent mortgagee for any sum.⁸⁴

What rights in respect of foreclosure before default are conferred by the mortgage is a question of law for the court, and it is error to submit it to the jury.⁸⁵

b. On Partial Default

A mortgage securing a debt payable in installments may ordinarily be foreclosed, at the mortgagee's option, on a default in the payment of one installment, or at the maturity of the whole debt.

Where the mortgage debt is payable in installments, a failure to pay an installment when due constitutes a breach of the condition of the mortgage,⁸⁶ unless the language of the instrument expresses a contrary intention;⁸⁷ but it is optional with the mortgagee whether he will foreclose then or wait until the maturity of the other installments.⁸⁸ The right to foreclose on a default in

Intention to remove or dispose of the property at or about the time of commencing the foreclosure is sufficient to entitle the mortgagee to foreclose under such a provision, an actual attempt to remove or dispose of the property on the very day the foreclosure is brought being unnecessary.—Nichols v. Ward, 108 S. E. 832, 27 Ga.App. 501.

80. Provision as to minimum amount

The mere fact that the mortgagor disposed of a part of the property will not entitle the mortgagee to foreclose, under a provision authorizing foreclosure in case of an unreasonable depreciation, where the mortgage provides that the property shall not be allowed to fall below a specified amount, and the remainder of the property did not fall below such amount.—Citizens' Bank v. Tyler, Mo.App., 226 S.W. 603.

11 C.J. p 697 note 15.

Even without provision in the mortgage to such effect, the mortgagee has an option to wait until the maturity of all the installments

the payment of a later installment is not affected by the fact that a different mortgage securing the same debt was foreclosed on a default in the payment of an earlier installment.⁸⁹ However, if the holder of the mortgage induces the mortgagor to omit payment of an installment, he cannot foreclose the mortgage without first making a demand and affording the mortgagor a reasonable opportunity to pay such installment.⁹⁰

According to some authority, a mortgage may be foreclosed for the whole amount of the debt on a default in the payment of an installment, irrespective of whether the mortgage so provides.⁹¹ Under other authority, this can be done where the mortgage so provides,⁹² or the mortgagor has in some other manner agreed,⁹³ but not otherwise.⁹⁴ Likewise, where the mortgage so provides, the mortgagee may, at his option, foreclose the mortgage for the whole amount of the debt on a default in the payment of interest.⁹⁵

A failure to declare an acceleration and to foreclose on the mortgagor's first default does not preclude an acceleration and foreclosure on a subsequent default by the mortgagor.⁹⁶ No demand for payment is necessary to entitle the mortgagee to accelerate maturity and foreclose the mortgage for the entire amount of the debt on a default by the mortgagor.⁹⁷

According to some authority, an acceleration clause in a chattel mortgage is applicable only to the enforcement of the mortgage,⁹⁸ and, as shown in the title Bills and Notes § 251 b, will not accelerate the maturity of the note for the purpose of a personal action thereon.

§ 361. Delay or Failure to Foreclose

Under a statute to that effect, the lien of a chattel mortgage will become void as against third parties if not foreclosed within a specified time after maturity; the foreclosure must, of course, be in a manner recognized by law.

Where a statute so provides, the lien of a chattel mortgage will become void as against third parties if not foreclosed within a specified time after maturity.⁹⁹ However, a foreclosure is timely, although not completed within such period, if it would have been completed during such time but for a restraining order and an assumption of exclusive jurisdiction over the chattels by a court in a proceeding by another party, and if it is completed after a relinquishment of such jurisdiction, the mortgagee's rights being the same on the date the court relinquished, as on the day it assumed, exclusive jurisdiction over the chattels.¹

The foreclosure must, of course, be in a manner recognized by law;² a mere taking of possession,³ or a statement and an indorsement on the mortgage by a constable to whom the mortgage was intrusted for foreclosure, that he had foreclosed it,⁴ will not preserve the lien as against third persons.

§ 362. Methods of Foreclosure

- a. In general
- b. Under statutes

a. In General

A mortgage may be foreclosed by judicial proceedings, or, if such procedure is authorized, by a sale without judicial proceedings or by a transfer of possession intended as a foreclosure. Where more than one method exists, the mortgagee may elect which he will pursue.

A mortgage may ordinarily be foreclosed by a judicial proceeding for that purpose, as will be hereinafter discussed in § 398. Equity is not deprived of its jurisdiction over such a proceeding by the fact that the parties have stipulated for a foreclobefore foreclosing the mortgage.—J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Van Vols, 180 N.W. 656, 190 Iowa 543.

sure by some other method,⁵ such as a sale without judicial proceedings⁶ in a manner authorized by statute.⁷ However, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, a judicial proceeding is not ordinarily required,⁸ especially where the mortgage itself provides a method of foreclosure.⁹ Where a foreclosure is sought in a judicial proceeding, the court will not direct a delivery of the property to the mortgagee, but will direct a sale thereof, a discharge of the debt out of the proceeds, and the payment of any surplus to the mortgagor.¹⁰

As shown infra § 366, a foreclosure may be effected by a sale without a judicial proceeding, provided, in some jurisdictions, a power of sale is expressly conferred in the mortgage. Further, a mere taking of possession of the property by the mortgagee with the consent of the mortgagor has been held, where the parties so intended, to constitute a foreclosure.¹¹ An execution creditor, although also the holder of a chattel mortgage, however, cannot enforce the lien of his chattel mortgage by his execution.¹²

Election. Where different modes of foreclosure exist, the mortgagee may ordinarily elect which one he will pursue,¹³ as, for example, whether he will sell without judicial proceedings or will resort to a judicial foreclosure,¹⁴ at least if the former method is inadequate or less adequate.¹⁵ The remedies by action to foreclose and by sale without judicial proceedings are inconsistent and cannot both be pursued.¹⁶ A void foreclosure is not an election of remedies precluding a subsequent enforcement of the mortgage.¹⁷

A foreclosure may, and in some jurisdictions must, be effected in the manner prescribed by statute.

A foreclosure may, of course, be effected in a manner provided by statute,¹⁸ and this is true although the parties have stipulated in the mortgage for foreclosure by some other method.¹⁹ Moreover, under some statutes the methods of foreclosure provided are held exclusive.²⁰ However, in other jurisdictions, the statutory method is not ex-

Compliance with other statute immaterial

If a foreclosure has been properly conducted, it is immaterial that the mortgagee attempted, but failed, to comply also with the provisions of a statute relating to the retaking of property sold under a conditional sales contract.—Lauer v. Matushek & Son Piano Co., 172 N.Y.S. 439.

In Oklahoma, a chattel mortgagee may foreclose his mortgage either by Comp.St.1921 §§ 8186–8210, or by § 7646.—Mitchell v. White, 233 P. 746, 106 Okl. 218.

In Utah, under a statute providing that there is but one action for the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage on real estate, or personal property, the remedy by action to foreclose a chattel mortgage is exclusive, unless the mortgage contains a power of sale, in which event a foreclosure by advertisement and sale is authorized.—Morgan v. Layton, 208 P. 505, 60 Utah 280.

clusive,²¹ but may be waived by the mortgagor;²² and the mortgagee may proceed under a power of sale contained in the mortgage,²³ or a bill in equity may be maintained,²⁴ especially where the legal remedy is inadequate.²⁵ A statute forbidding the foreclosure of a mortgage has been held not to preclude an enforcement of the lien by a proper sale of the property.²⁶ Where a statute so provides, a foreclosure of the mortgage in a manner other than that provided by the statute will preclude the recovery of a judgment for any deficiency, as shown infra § 390, even though the mortgagor has waived the statutory method.

Mortgages of specified types of articles. Where a statute so provides, mortgages covering types of articles specified by the statute, such as household goods, wearing apparel, or mechanic's tools, must be enforced by an action for that purpose.²⁷ Such a statute is constitutional.²⁸ Moreover, it will be construed liberally,²⁹ and should be applied to the necessary household goods of a widower without any family as well as to those of a married man.³⁰ However, such a statute does not apply to the sale of furniture on the installment plan by regular dealers.³¹ It has also been held that such a statute does not apply where property of the kind contemplated by the statute included in the mortgage is insignificant in amount as compared with the value of other property included therein.³²

§ 363. Existence of or Resort to Other Remedies

Unless restrained by statute a mortgagee may bring an action for the conversion of the mortgaged chattels, or to recover their possession, or to enforce his lien; but he can have but one satisfaction for his debt.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the holder of a chattel mortgage may, on the mortgagor's default, sue at law to recover the mortgaged chattel,³³ or for its conversion,³⁴ or he may sue in equity for the foreclosure of the lien which he has by virtue of the mortgage.³⁵ Also, as shown infra § 440, a mortgagee has, in circumstances varying in different jurisdictions, an action at law on the mortgage debt. Where several remedies exist, the mortgagor cannot complain of the mortgagee's choice among them.³⁶

In some jurisdictions, an action for conversion or to recover possession of the mortgaged property and an action to foreclose are cumulative remedies,³⁷ while in other jurisdictions they are, or apparently are, only alternative remedies,³⁸ or, at least,

Judgment in unlawful detainer

The fact that the mortgagee has obtained a judgment in an action of unlawful detainer does not preclude the enforcement of the mortgage in so far as it secures the payment of the claim incorporated in the judgment.—Stich v. Gordon, 14 P.2d 835, 126 Cal.App. 434.

must be joined.³⁹ Where an action may be maintained on the mortgage debt, such an action and a proceeding against the property are generally regarded as concurrent remedies,⁴⁰ although it has been held that they are only alternatives,⁴¹ and that they cannot be pursued simultaneously.⁴² In any case, the creditor can have, of course, but one satisfaction for his debt.⁴³ Where the debt has been reduced to judgment, the mortgagee may, at his election, levy an execution on the property or proceed under the mortgage; but a levy followed by a prompt release of the property without a sale is not an election of remedies precluding proceedings under the mortgage.⁴⁴

The fact that the mortgagee received other security in addition to the mortgage at the time of the execution of the latter, and that he has not pursued his remedy against such other security, will not preclude a foreclosure of the mortgage as a matter of law.⁴⁵ Also, a foreclosure of a mortgage has been held not precluded by the fact that a trust deed securing bonds given as additional security for the mortgage debt has been foreclosed.⁴⁶ The fact that the mortgagee has taken possession of the mortgaged property for the purpose of managing the mortgagor's business and applying the proceeds on the mortgage debt does not, if the mortgagor consented to the taking and the mortgagee has acted honestly and diligently, affect his right to foreclose.⁴⁷

Action by mortgagor. A buyer's action for a breach of a sales contract cannot be pleaded in abatement of an action by the seller on a purchase-money note and to foreclose a chattel mortgage securing it.⁴⁸

§ 364. — Statutory Provisions

Under statutes to that effect, it is variously held that there can be but one action to enforce an obligation secured by a chattel mortgage; that an action under a mortgage is suspended pending an action on the debt; that successive actions may be maintained on both; or that an inability to foreclose does not preclude a resort to other remedies.

Where a statute so provides, there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt or the enforcement of any right secured by a mortgage on personal property.⁴⁹ Under such a statute an action on the debt precludes an action to foreclose the mortgage;⁵⁰ but the mere commencement of an action on the debt, subsequently dismissed without the court having acted thereon, has been held not to be an election precluding a foreclosure of the mortgage.⁵¹ Such a statute, however, has been construed to be applicable only to actions directly affecting the rights of the mortgagor under the mortgage,⁵² or to actions which are necessary to the recovery of the debt and a foreclosure of the lien, and not to any collateral contract in the mortgage which does not affect the interests of the parties in the mortgaged property.⁵³ Accordingly the statute does not prevent a mortgagee from maintaining an action of replevin where the mortgage by its terms authorizes him to take possession after a default;⁵⁴ and this has been held to be so, although a foreclosure of the mortgage is pending,⁵⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁶ Also, the statute has been held not to preclude an action for conversion against one not the mortgagor;⁵⁷ nor does the fact that an action for possession has been maintained against such a person preclude a subsequent action for foreclosure.⁵⁸ However, where the mortgagee fails to foreclose against all of the mortgaged property, he is precluded from subsequently maintaining an action for the possession of the remainder.⁵⁹

Under a statute to that effect, the right to maintain an action under the mortgage is suspended during the pendency of an action on the debt until judgment is rendered in the plaintiff's favor and an execution is returned unsatisfied.⁶⁰ A statute requiring that if separate actions on the debt and to foreclose the mortgage are maintained simultaneously in the same county, plaintiff must elect which he will pursue, has been held not to prevent the bringing of successive actions on the debt and mortgage.⁶¹ The fact that a mortgage cannot be foreclosed because of noncompliance with a statute requiring a mortgagee to furnish a verified statement of account has been held not to prevent a resort to other remedies to enforce payment.⁶²

§ 365. Injunction against Foreclosure

- a. Right to remedy
- b. Persons entitled to injunction

Reason for decision

58. Action against assignee of lease

The statute does not prevent a lessor who has maintained an action of unlawful detainer against the assignee of a lease from thereafter foreclosing a chattel mortgage executed by the original lessee to secure the rent, since the liability of the latter is separate and distinct from the liability of the assignee.—*Schehr v. - c. Awarding other relief
- d. Actions

a. Right to Remedy

Where sufficient grounds for equitable intervention are shown, the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage may be enjoined.

Where sufficient grounds for equitable interference are shown, particularly where under such circumstances the issuance of the writ is authorized by statute, the foreclosure of a mortgage may be enjoined.⁶³ Thus the absence of an adequate remedy at law may warrant the issuance of an injunction against a foreclosure.⁶⁴ On the other hand, in the absence of a statute to other effect, a foreclosure will not be enjoined where it is not shown that there is no adequate remedy at law for any injury occasioned by it if wrongful.⁶⁵ Subject to these general rules, an injunction will lie to prevent a sale under a void mortgage;⁶⁶ a sale under a mortgage securing a debt which is not yet due,⁶⁷ or which has been paid,⁶⁸ or which is unlawful;⁶⁹ a sale of property on which the mortgage is not a lien;⁷⁰ or a foreclosure in violation of a collateral agreement.⁷¹ Also, it has been held sufficient to justify equitable interference that there was a controversy as to the amount due on the mortgage debt,⁷² or regarding the property covered by the Grounds of invalidity

(1) Insufficient description of the property.—Durel v. Buchanan, 86 So. 189, 147 La. 804.

(2) Want of reffiling.—Beebe v. Prime, 166 N.Y.S. 56, 99 Misc. 668.

mortgage,⁷³ or that there was fraud on the part of the mortgagee;⁷⁴ but an injunction has been refused when asked for merely on the ground that the mortgagee was threatening foreclosure⁷⁵ or had advertised the mortgaged property for sale.⁷⁶ Further, there may be an injunction to prevent a power of sale from being exercised in an inequitable manner,⁷⁷ or so as to be perverted from its legitimate purpose, as where the power is sought to be used for the purpose of oppressing the debtor or to enable the creditor to acquire the property himself.⁷⁸

Injunction pendente lite. The prosecution of an action to declare a forfeiture or to foreclose the mortgage may be restrained pending the determination of an action to have the mortgage declared void.⁷⁹ Also, the exercise of a power of sale without judicial proceedings may be restrained pending the determination of an action to have the mortgage declared void,⁸⁰ or to have it adjudged that the mortgage has been paid,⁸¹ or to determine the amount due⁸² or the property covered by the mortgage,⁸³ or pending an action for the return of the property and damages for its wrongful detention.⁸⁴ However, an injunction which would in effect determine the issue to be decided at a trial on the merits will not be granted unless the right thereto is clear.⁸⁵ The fact that, at the conclusion of a trial on the merits, an injunction pendente lite is dissolved does not amount to a finding that the person obtaining the injunction was not entitled thereto at the time that it was granted and that it was im-

Transferring proceedings to court. Under a statute to that effect, a foreclosure by notice and sale may be enjoined where necessary,⁸⁷ or where it appears that the mortgagor has a valid counterclaim or a defense against the debt,⁸⁸ in order that the proceedings may be transferred to court, and the right to foreclose, as well as the amount claimed to be due, be contested in a judicial proceeding. However, such a statute will not prevent the mortgagor from adopting some other remedy for the contesting of a foreclosure.⁸⁹

Action to establish right. Under a statute to that effect, a third person claiming a right to property about to be sold under a chattel mortgage is not bound to enjoin the sale in order to protect his right, but may maintain an action to establish the right, and if he succeeds in establishing it a sale pending the action will be a nullity.⁹⁰

b. Persons Entitled to Injunction

Any person having a right, interest, or claim sufficiently connected with the mortgaged property is entitled to enjoin a foreclosure of the mortgage, but the mere fact that he may incur injury is not enough.

Any person having a right, interest, or claim which is sufficiently connected with the mortgaged property is entitled to an injunction against a foreclosure of the mortgage;⁹¹ but the mere fact that a person's right, interest, or claim may be prejudiced by a foreclosure will not entitle him to maintain an action for an injunction in the absence of a

Injunction held necessary

Where the mortgagor was resisting a foreclosure out of court by disputing the amount claimed, and the mortgagee was resisting the former's application for an injunction and insisting that the sheriff not be disturbed in the summary proceedings and sale, an injunction was necessary, within the meaning of the statute stated in the text, in order effectively to transfer the proceedings to the court.—State v. sufficient connection between such right, interest, or claim and the property.⁹²

Owner of property. A stranger to the mortgage claiming title to the property may enjoin a foreclosure.⁹³

A mortgagor who has not paid the debt secured by a second mortgage has an interest in the property entitling him to enjoin an action by the first mortgagee, to which the second mortgagee was not made a party, to foreclose the first mortgage; this is so, even where the second mortgagee has legal title, if the mortgagor is entitled to possession, and to have the property sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the debt secured by the second mortgage.⁹⁴

Creditors of mortgagor. A bill to enjoin the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage may be maintained by a creditor whose claim has been adjudicated,⁹⁵ or who has acquired a lien on the property.⁹⁶ Thus a bill to enjoin the foreclosure of a mortgage may be maintained by an attachment⁹⁷ or judgment⁹⁸ creditor of the mortgagor, or by an administrator of the mortgagor in possession of the chattels and representing creditors whose claims have been admitted.⁹⁹ On the other hand, such a bill ordinarily cannot be maintained by a general creditor who has not connected himself with the property either by a lien or by securing an adjudication of his claim.¹

Mortgagees. A junior mortgagee, even if his debt is not yet due, may enjoin a senior mortgagee or his representatives from selling the mortgaged property for less than its value.² A second mortgagee may have the foreclosure of a prior mortgage enjoined on the ground that it is fraudulent, even before the second mortgage has matured.³ Also, a senior mortgagee, it has been held, may enjoin a sale by a junior mortgagee.⁴ However, it has been held, under a statute giving a person claiming ownership of property about to be sold by a sheriff a right to enjoin the sale, that a mortgagee cannot enjoin a sale of the property under another mortgage.⁵

Purchaser. A purchaser of the mortgaged goods at an execution sale against the mortgagor cannot enjoin foreclosure of a mortgage given prior to the sale.⁶

A landlord is not entitled to enjoin the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage executed by his tenant to a third person in the absence of a showing that the tenant is insolvent or that the landlord has a lien which it is necessary to protect by an injunction.⁷

c. Awarding Other Relief

In an action to enjoin the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, a court of equity may ordinarily grant whatever relief equity may require.

In an action to restrain a mortgagee in the exercise of his ordinary right of foreclosure, a court of equity will ordinarily see that justice is done by granting whatever relief equity may require.⁸ Accordingly, the court may make the injunction conditional on the mortgagor's executing a new mortgage,⁹ or paying over to the mortgagee such balance of the debt as may still remain due.¹⁰ Where the amount due is disputed, it has been held that the mortgagor must have paid or tendered what he considered due under the mortgage before he may enjoin a foreclosure.¹¹ However, a mortgagor will not be required to pay into court the amount due on the mortgage where it would be inequitable to make such a requirement a condition to obtaining relief.¹² The imposing of a condition that further security be given will not justify an injunction against the exercise of the rights conferred by an insecurity clause in a mortgage.¹³

Under a statute authorizing an injunction against a foreclosure by a sale out of court if it appears that the mortgagor has a valid counterclaim or a defense against the debt, it is held that an injunction will issue as a matter of right, not of discretion,¹⁴ and, accordingly, that the court cannot impose any condition on the granting thereof.¹⁵ Under such a statute, the mortgagor cannot be required to tender the amount due or to offer to pay any amount found to be due,¹⁶ or to give an injunction bond,¹⁷ before being entitled to present his counterclaim or defense in court.

Adjudication of entire controversy. Its aid having been invoked, a court of equity may proceed to give complete relief and dispose of the whole matter between the parties.¹⁸ Accordingly, the court may retain jurisdiction for the purpose of determining title to the property,¹⁹ to assess any damages incurred by plaintiff as a result of the foreclosure.²⁰ Where an injunction bill challenges the amount due on a debt and mortgage, and defendant answers, the court may proceed to take an accounting, decree payment, foreclose the mortgage, and determine any deficiency;²¹ this on the ground that such a bill is an offer by plaintiff to do equity by paying any balance that the court may find to be due,²² and that an answer to such a bill is, in effect, a bill for an accounting or to foreclose.²³ Where it appears that the property may decline in value, or that the cost of caring for it may be great, pending the proceedings, plaintiff may be called upon to consent to a sale of the property forthwith, or, if he refuses, may be required to execute an indemnity bond to hold defendant harmless from such causes.²⁴

Injunction bond. Under a statute so providing, a party seeking to enjoin the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage must file a bond conditioned on the payment of damages which the party enjoined may sustain because of the injunction.²⁵ Under a statute providing for an injunction against a foreclosure without legal proceedings in order to permit a contest of the right to foreclose in a judicial proceeding, however, it has been held that a bond is unnecessary.²⁶

The extent of liability on an injunction bond is controlled primarily by a fair construction of the terms thereof.²⁷ Thus a bond conditioned on the payment of any decree and damages awarded defendant against plaintiff has been held to render the sureties liable for a deficiency determined by the court after foreclosing the mortgage.²⁸

d. Actions

Rules applicable in injunction proceedings generally ordinarily apply to proceedings for injunctions of this character.

In an action to enjoin foreclosure, all parties actually interested in the mortgage or the transaction complained of must be joined as defendants.²⁹

Payment of indebtedness

Where, although the action for an injunction is brought by only one of two mortgagor partners, the condition of the injunction bond is the payment of the indebtedness by plaintiff, he and his sureties are jointly and severally liable for the indebtedness.—Graff v. Epstein, 213 N.W. 190, 238 Mich. 227.

29. Mich.—Costigan v. Howard, 58 N.W. 1116, 100 Mich. 335.

The petition or complaint must show a sufficient connection between plaintiff's right, interest, or claim and the property involved;³⁰ it must disclose the want of a right on the part of defendant to foreclose,³¹ and the need of plaintiff for the equitable relief sought.³² If relief other than a restraining of the foreclosure is sought, the nature of such relief must be sufficiently stated.³³ The complaint must be properly verified.³⁴

Matters which are questions for trial need not be proved on motion for injunction pendente lite.³⁵ In order to authorize the issuance of an injunction against the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, the evidence must establish with sufficient legal certainty the existence of the facts constituting the cause of action.³⁶

Where a mortgage is foreclosed without judicial proceedings pending an action to restrain a foreclosure, a motion by defendant for a final decree should not be sustained, but the court should retain the bill for an assessment of damages.³⁷

On the dissolution of an injunction restraining foreclosure, no personal judgment against the mortgagor, it has been held, can be entered on the injunction bond for the value of the mortgaged property which the mortgagee had been prevented from seizing.³⁸

B. FORECLOSURE BY SALE WITHOUT JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

§ 366. Authority to Sell

- a. In general
- b. Persons authorized to sell

a. In General

After a forfeiture, the holder of a chattel mortgage may ordinarily sell the property without a judicial proceeding, at least where the parties have so agreed.

After a forfeiture, the holder of a chattel mortgage may ordinarily sell the property in satisfaction of his debt without a judicial proceeding,³⁹ at least where the parties have so agreed.⁴⁰ Thus it

Failure of consideration

Defense of failure of consideration, not alleged in bill to enjoin foreclosure of chattel mortgage, is unavailing, since party can recover only according to allegations in bill.—Gillfillan's Adm'r v. Bixby, 139 A. 250, 100 Vt. 468.

Waiver by the mortgagee of his right to foreclose is not available to plaintiff unless alleged in the complaint.—Nett v. Stockgrowers' Finance Corporation, 274 P. 497, 84 Mont. 116.

Payment

A petition alleging a delivery of the property by the mortgagor to the mortgagee and the latter's acceptance thereof has been held to allege, not an accord and satisfaction, but a payment, sufficient to state a cause of action for an injunction against a sale of the property.—Southwest Nat. Bank of Dallas v. Cates, Tex.Civ.App., 262 S.W. 569.

"The power to foreclose through sales, other than under court order, is purely contractual."—Campbell v.

is generally held that the mortgage may be foreclosed by a sale of the property under a power of sale contained in the mortgage without resort to a court for a decree of foreclosure,⁴¹ unless, as already considered in § 362 b, the statutory method of foreclosure is exclusive. In some jurisdictions the power to sell is restricted to those cases in which it is expressly conferred in the mortgage;⁴² but in other jurisdictions it is not so restricted⁴³ and it is sufficient that the parties have agreed to the sale⁴⁴ orally⁴⁵ or by a separate writing.⁴⁶

A power to sell contained in a mortgage may be a naked power or a power coupled with an interest,⁴⁷ and does not terminate with the expiration of the period of time for which the mortgage was given.⁴⁸ It is irrevocable by the mortgagor,⁴⁹ and neither he nor an equitable owner whom he represents may defeat the right of the mortgagees to foreclose by a sale under such power.⁵⁰ The power has been held not to continue after the death of the mortgagor,⁵¹ although the contrary has been held as regards a right to sell based on a statute.⁵²

Property in custodia legis. According to some authority, the interest of the mortgagor may be sold under the mortgage although the property is in custodia legis,⁵³ but there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁴

b. Persons Authorized to Sell

The terms of a mortgage or a statute specifying who shall be entitled to sell must ordinarily be followed. A sale by one of several mortgagees under a mortgage not securing separate debts is invalid, but the contrary is held where the debts are separate.

Where the mortgage specifies by whom the power of sale shall be executed, it can be executed only by such person,⁵⁵ especially where the power is a naked one not coupled with an interest.⁵⁶ Such person cannot lawfully delegate his authority,⁵⁷ unless the mortgage so provides, expressly or by plain implication.⁵⁸ Where a power of sale is conferred on a trustee in a deed of trust, the power may be executed only by the trustee, unless he is unable or refuses to execute it.⁵⁹ Likewise it is held that the terms of a statute specifying the person who shall be entitled to foreclose by a sale without judicial proceedings must be followed.⁶⁰ However, it has been held that a power of sale contained in the mortgage may be executed by the person named in the mortgage without calling upon a person designated by the statute.⁶¹

Joint mortgagees. Where a mortgage to several mortgagees is not given to secure a separate indebtedness of each, a sale by one of them is invalid, unless the mortgagor has ratified the act.⁶² On the other hand, where joint mortgagees hold the property as security for debts due them respectively in the proportions that their respective demands bear to each other, it is generally held that one of the mortgagees may sell the property to the extent of his interest in it;⁶³ but there is other authority holding that he cannot dispose of the property, but only of his interest therein.⁶⁴ A mortgage securing separate debts may be foreclosed by the mortgagees jointly.⁶⁵

§ 367. Procedure Generally

A foreclosure by a sale without judicial proceedings under a statute or a power of sale in the mortgage must be conducted in accordance with the provisions of the statute or of the mortgage, and with due regard generally for the interests of other persons in the property.

Where the right to sell is based on statute, the provisions of the statute as to sale must be followed.⁶⁶ In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a power of sale contained in the mortgage must, generally speaking, be strictly pursued,⁶⁷ and the rights and duties of the holder of the mortgage in executing the power are limited by the terms of the instrument.⁶⁸ Slight irregularities in the foreclosure, however, will not necessarily invalidate it, especially if the rights of no person are thereby prejudiced,⁶⁹ and it is sufficient that the foreclosure be fairly conducted.⁷⁰ Moreover, the consent of the mortgagor may obviate the effect of irregularities,⁷¹ and if the mortgagor insists on a foreclosure as stipulated in the mortgage, he must himself comply with the conditions of the mortgage.⁷²

A person exercising his right to sell must have due regard for the interests of the mortgagor, or other persons, in the property.⁷³ He is not entitled to act as the owner of the property,⁷⁴ and, where he is the mortgagee, he is regarded as being an agent or trustee of the mortgageor,⁷⁵ and his con-

Manner and conduct of sale see infra § 373.

Subsequent mortgagee

A first mortgagee owes a second mortgagee same obligation of good faith and reasonable care in exercising a power of sale as first mortgagee owes to mortgagor. The fact that first mortgagee is not contractually bound to give second mortgagee notice of sale does not free him from this obligation. Bad faith and lack of reasonable care may be found without showing that first mortgagee promised to give second mortgagee notice of foreclosure sale.—Castro v. Linchitz, Mass., 8 N.E.2d 744.

duct and fairness in making the sale is always open to investigation by any person having a sufficient interest in the property.⁷⁶

§ 368. Preliminary Proceedings

The terms of a statute prescribing preliminary proceedings, such as furnishing the mortgagor a statement of account or appraising the property, must ordinarily be followed.

Where a statute specifies proceedings to be had preliminary to the sale, its terms must ordinarily be followed.⁷⁷ Thus, where a statute so provides, a statement of account must be furnished the mortgagor,⁷⁸ or the property must be appraised,⁷⁹ before the sale.

The affidavit of foreclosure, where required by statute, should set forth facts showing a right to foreclosure, including a showing that the debt on which the right is founded is due and mature.⁸⁰ A substitution of the trustee in a deed of trust need not be recorded unless required by a statute or by the deed.⁸¹

Time of sale. A right to sell cannot be validly exercised before the expiration of a time specified by the mortgage or a statute,⁸² unless the mortgagor consents to a sale before such time.⁸³

§ 369. — Demand

A demand on the mortgagor to perform the condition of his mortgage is a condition precedent to a valid sale where there can be no default until demand. A demand for peaceable possession of the property is necessary, under a statute so providing, before the sale may be made by the sheriff.

A demand on the mortgagor to perform the condition of his mortgage is a condition precedent to a valid sale where there can be no default until demand,⁸⁴ as where the mortgage note is payable on demand,⁸⁵ but even in such case a notice of intention to foreclose has been held equivalent to a demand of payment and to entitle the mortgagee to possession of the mortgaged property,⁸⁶ especially where the mortgagor has rendered an actual demand impossible.⁸⁷ Demand is not necessary if the mortgage waives it,⁸⁸ as where he has authorized a sale on default without notice⁸⁹ or at such time as the mortgagee deems himself insecure.⁹⁰ A demand is also unnecessary where it is obvious that it would be futile.⁹¹

Under some statutes, there must be a demand from the mortgagor for peaceable possession of the property before the foreclosure may be conducted by the sheriff,⁹² and although the statute is to protect the mortgagor from the expenses of such a sale, the mortgagee's noncompliance therewith is not cured by his paying the expenses.⁹³

§ 370. — Notice

- a. Necessity
- b. Sufficiency
- c. Effect of defects

a. Necessity

Unless waived, notice of a foreclosure by sale should be given, particularly where a statute or a stipulation in the mortgage provides therefor.

itself⁹⁵ provides therefor, and, although there is authority to the contrary,⁹⁶ it would seem that such notice is a requisite even in the absence of a statutory or contractual requirement.⁹⁷ Under some statutes, the notice is in the nature of process and is the authority to the officer to take possession of the mortgaged property.⁹⁸ On the other hand, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the mortgage itself may dispense with the necessity of notice,⁹⁹ as where it provides that the mortgagee may sell at a private sale.¹ Also, where the statutory method of foreclosure is not exclusive, the mortgagor may waive statutory requirements as to notice,² as well as stipulations in the mortgage requiring notice.³ Likewise, under the rule that notice is necessary, although not stipulated for in the mortgage or required by statute, notice may be waived.⁴

Postponement or adjournment of sale. In the absence of a statute the mortgagee may in the exercise of a reasonable discretion adjourn the sale under the power from time to time without a new notice to the mortgagor.⁵ However, under a statute expressly so providing a foreclosure sale may be postponed from time to time by inserting a notice of such postponement as soon as practicable in the newspaper in which the original advertisement of the sale was published.⁶

Subordinate lienholders. Unless a mortgage is regarded as vesting legal title in the mortgagee,⁷ a sale by a mortgagor of chattels, in whom is the legal title, with the consent of the first mortgagee, without notice to subordinate lienholders does not foreclose their liens, although the sale is made for the full value of the property,⁸ and the proceeds are applied to the payment of the debt secured by the first lien.⁹

b. Sufficiency

Although immaterial variations are not fatal, the notice of sale must substantially comply with statutory requirements or the provisions in the mortgage.

The notice of sale must substantially conform to the requirement of the statute¹⁰ or the provisions of the mortgage,¹¹ although variations have been held harmless where not as to material matters,¹² particularly where the mortgagor has actual knowledge of the sale.¹³ Further, the insufficiency of the notice may be waived.¹⁴ Where the mortgage authorized a sale either with or without notice, the fact that the mortgagee elected to sell at a public sale has been held not to impose upon him a duty of giving notice in a specific manner required by statutes relating to sales under execution.¹⁵

Contents. Where a statute so requires, the notice must state the nature of the default;¹⁶ but in the absence of such a statute a notice of foreclosure proceedings commenced by virtue of an insecurity clause in the mortgage before the debt is due need not allege that the mortgagee deems himself insecure and declares the whole debt due, since the seizure of the property on notice of sale is a sufficient declaration of such intention.¹⁷ Under a statute so providing, the notice must state the amount claimed to be due,¹⁸ and contain a description of the mortgage.¹⁹ Further, the notice must sufficiently describe,²⁰ and state the location of,²¹ the property to be sold. If the sale embraces the whole of the mortgaged property, the description thereof in the notice is sufficient if it conforms substantially to that contained in the mortgage.²²

Signature. In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, the notice of sale may be signed by the mortgagee or his agent.²³ Where there has been an equitable assignment of the mortgage, the notice may be signed in the name of the holder of the legal title in case he does not object.²⁴

Time of notice. Where no particular time is specified, the notice must be given a reasonable time in advance of the sale,²⁵ the question of reasonableness depending on the circumstances of each case.²⁶ On the other hand, where a time is specified, the notice must be given for the time specified before the sale,²⁷ unless the mortgagor waives the requirement by consenting to a lesser notice.²⁸

Manner of service. Where a statute so provides, personal service of the notice of the mortgagee's intended sale is required to be made upon the mortgagor,²⁹ or the owner of the property,³⁰ if he can

Notice before filing of mortgage

Sale under chattel mortgage in county other than that where the mortgage was on file, as authorized by the mortgage, was not invalid because notice of sale was published be found. Also, where a statute so provides, personal service must be made upon the person in actual possession of the property,³¹ but some statutes do not require service upon such person where he is not the mortgagor and has voluntarily surrendered possession of the property.³² The effort to obtain personal service must be reasonable and bona fide.³³ However, unless otherwise provided by statute, it is not necessary that the notice be served on the mortgagor before the sheriff takes possession.³⁴

Under some statutes and mortgages an advertisement of the sale is sufficient.³⁵ If the mortgage or statutes prescribe a certain place for giving notice,³⁶ as by posting the notice in some conspicuous place,³⁷ the notice must be given accordingly. However, the validity of a sale will not be affected by the fact that prior to the time of sale, some of the notices posted as required by statute, were destroyed, without the knowledge of the one making the sale, by causes beyond his control.³⁸

Amendment of notice. It has been held that, although the first notice delivered to the sheriff was insufficient, a second notice which is sufficient in form, and under which the sale was made, may be treated as an amendment, and will be sufficient.³⁹

According to some authorities, a defect in the notice will invalidate the sale, although by other authorities the sale will be valid, especially if it brings the full value and the proceeds are applied properly, and the mortgagor will be remitted to an action for damages.

In some jurisdictions, it is held that the sale is void if the mortgagee fails to give notice as provided for in the mortgage⁴⁰ or as required by statute;⁴¹ or the mortgagor may have relief in equity.⁴² Furthermore, under a statute to that effect, a sale without conformity to the requirements of the statute as to notice will extinguish the mortgage and the mortgage debt.⁴³ On the other hand, according to some authorities, defects in notice will not be regarded as a ground for declaring the foreclosure sale void if the property brings the full value and the proceeds are properly applied.⁴⁴ Similarly, there is authority holding that a sale under a power in the mortgage will pass title to the purchaser, although notices of sale are not posted as prescribed by the mortgage,⁴⁵ and the only remedy which the mortgagor has in such a case is an action of law against the mortgagee for damages.⁴⁶ The amount of damages recoverable for a sale without a sufficient notice is the value of the mortgaged property less the amount of the mortgage lien thereon.⁴⁷

§ 371. Transfer of Proceedings to Court

Under a statute to that effect, proceedings to foreclose by notice and sale may be transferred to a court upon a demand by any sufficiently interested person, for the purpose of contesting the foreclosure in a judicial proceeding. Thereafter the foreclosure will proceed as if originally brought in the court.

Under a statute to that effect, proceedings to foreclose by notice and sale may⁴⁸ or must⁴⁹ be transferred to a court upon a proper demand therefor by any person having a sufficient interest in the subject matter, in order to permit a contest of the right to foreclose, or of the amount due, in a judicial proceeding. One seeking transfer of summary foreclosure proceedings must show an interest in the property entitling him to resist foreclosure and also negative the mortgagee's right to foreclose,⁵⁰ and any matter which would be a bona fide defense to a foreclosure in the courts is a sufficient interest to require a removal to the courts on a demand by the person asserting such a defense.⁵¹ Where, under the statute, the transfer is not mandatory, a transfer cannot be required if some other remedy is open for testing the validity and legality of the mortgage or of making a defense thereto.⁵² A statute providing for a sale without judicial proceedings does not deprive a person claiming an interest in the property of an opportunity to defend against the mortgagee's claim where the statute provides also for a removal of the proceedings to a court on the former's demand.⁵³

After the proceedings have been transferred, the right to foreclose by notice and sale ceases, and the foreclosure must be by a proceeding in court.⁵⁴ The proceedings then stand, as regards the merits, just as if the foreclosure had originally been brought in the court by the holder of the mortgage,⁵⁵ the person on whose demand the proceedings were transferred becoming, not plaintiff, but defendant,⁵⁶ and remaining such throughout the proceeding.⁵⁷

§ 372. Taking Possession, Custody, and Protection of Property

- a. Right to possession
- b. Necessity and sufficiency of possession; custody

a. Right to Possession

The mortgagee may maintain an action for possession for the purpose of sale, or, after the sale, of delivering the same to the purchaser. A mortgagor failing to exercise his statutory right of injunction cannot object to a wrongful taking; nor can a subsequent attaching creditor object to certain irregularities if the mortgagee has possession and the mortgagor is not objecting.

The holder of a chattel mortgage may maintain an action to recover the possession of the mortgaged property for the purpose of a foreclosure by a sale without judicial proceedings,⁵⁸ the presumption being, if he fails to ask also for a foreclosure, that he intends to foreclose by a sale without judicial proceedings.⁵⁹ If a sale is had without previously taking possession, the mortgagee may maintain an action thereafter for possession in order to deliver possession to the purchaser.⁶⁰ Where it was agreed at the time of granting an extension of the debt that the mortgagee could declare the debt due at any time he felt insecure because of any act of the mortgagor, the mortgagee was entitled to take possession of the property for the purpose of sale upon any act of the mortgagor after the agreement causing the mortgagee to feel insecure.⁶¹ The fact that possession was also taken of chattels other than those covered by the mortgage has been held not to invalidate the proceeding where the taking was in good faith, the chattels wrongfully taken were promptly returned, and the owner incurred no injury.⁶² Moreover, even if the mortgagee is not entitled to foreclose, the mortgagor cannot complain that he was ousted from possession of the mortgaged property if he failed to take advantage of his statutory right to restrain the foreclosure proceedings.⁶³ Also it has been held that if the mortgagee has obtained possession and is foreclosing without the mortgagor's objection, a subsequent attaching creditor cannot avail himself of such irregularities as an insufficient affidavit or a failure properly to record the mortgage.⁶⁴

Duty to sell. A mortgagee taking possession of the property takes it at its worth and may be compelled to sell it.⁶⁵

b. Necessity and Sufficiency of Possession; Custody

In some jurisdictions the mortgagee must have possession of the chattels in order to foreclose the mortgage by a sale, but there is authority to other effect. The possession required is only relative, and the sheriff may transfer custody to the mortgagor.

In some jurisdictions it is regarded as necessary for the full execution of the power of sale contained in the mortgage that the mortgaged property should be in the possession of the mortgagee⁶⁶ so that he may fully effectuate the purposes of the sale by delivering possession to the purchaser.⁶⁷ However, there is authority holding that the mortgagee may sell without taking possession where an express power so to do is given him by the mortgage,⁶⁸ and that failure to take possession is an irregularity which renders the sale voidable but not void.⁶⁹ It has also been held that neither possession⁷⁰ nor a demand therefor⁷¹ is essential to the validity of the sale, without regard to a provision in the mortgage to that effect, even though the property is held adversely by another.⁷²

Where possession is required, it is, nevertheless, only a relative matter depending on the character and situation of the property possessed or claimed to be possessed,⁷³ and need be only such as is reasonably practicable.⁷⁴ A sheriff taking possession may place or leave the property in the hands of the mortgagor to be kept by him for the sheriff until the sale,⁷⁵ and such possession will be that of the sheriff, not of the mortgagor.⁷⁶ In such case the mortgagor will be entitled to a keeper's fee, even if the fee is made large because of his contesting the

§ 373. Manner and Conduct of Sale

Generally speaking, the sale must be conducted in the manner provided by the statute or by the mortgage, and with such diligence and fairness as will obtain the best or an adequate price for the property.

Where the manner of conducting the sale is prescribed by a statute, its terms must be followed,⁷⁸ unless the parties have agreed that the sale shall be conducted in some other manner,⁷⁹ and provided the agreement is not violative of public policy or in fraud of the rights of third persons.⁸⁰ Indeed, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the terms of a mortgage specifying the manner in which the sale shall be conducted must ordinarily be followed.⁸¹

The mortgagee, in conducting the sale, is regarded as an agent or trustee of the mortgagor,⁸² and must conduct it in such a manner as to obtain the best, a reasonable, or an adequate price for the property.⁸³ To that end, the person conducting the sale must exercise reasonable care and diligence in disposing of the goods,⁸⁴ and conduct the sale fairly and justly.⁸⁵ Persons desiring to purchase must be given a reasonable opportunity to offer bids,⁸⁶ open, fair, and free competition among bidders must not be discouraged,⁸⁷ and the property must be sold

Conditions must not be imposed on to the highest bidder;⁸⁸ otherwise, the mortgagee may be held liable to the mortgagor for any sacrifice resulting from a failure so to do.⁸⁹ However the law does not ordinarily require more than that the person conducting the sale comply with the terms of the mortgage, including any statutory requirements expressly or impliedly embodied therein, and act in good faith.⁹⁰ He is not required to see that bidders are present.⁹¹ Whether the sale shall be adjourned is a matter within the sound discretion of the person conducting it.⁹²

If the mortgage covers property that is partly subject to other liens or claims, the part that is not subject should be first sold.⁹³ A foreclosure of separate mortgages in a single summary proceeding is invalid where the mortgagor or attaching creditors cannot ascertain the amount claimed to be due under any particular mortgage.⁹⁴

A foreclosure sale is none the less such because of the fact that, by agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, it is attempted to conceal the forced character of the sale;⁹⁵ nor is it of any consequence that the sale was to satisfy a debt larger than that actually due, where such fact was not brought to the mortgagee's attention prior to the sale.⁹⁶

§ 374. — Place

A sale may be conducted at any accessible place on or near the premises where the property is situated, unless a place of sale is designated by the mortgage or by a statute, in which case the terms thereof must ordinarily be followed.

If there is a general power of sale, with no restriction as to the place where the sale shall be held, the sale may be held at any accessible place on or near the premises on which the mortgaged property is situated.⁹⁷ It is not necessary that the sale be held at the place of seizure.⁹⁸ On the other hand, if a place of sale is specified in the mortgage, and statutory requirements in regard thereto are complied with, a sale is properly conducted in that place.⁹⁹ Indeed, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, a sale conducted at a place other than that stipulated for in the mortgage is invalid,¹ unless the mortgagor consents to such sale.²

Where a place of sale is designated by a statute, its terms must be complied with by the mortgagee.³

Property used in interstate commerce after execution of mortgage is not by that fact removed from operation of statute specifying the place of sale.—Illinois Refining Co. v. Welch, supra.

Place held legally designated by the board of county commissioners.

In some jurisdictions, statutes specifying the place of giving notice are held to determine the place of sale.⁴ However, according to some authority, a statute providing the place of sale is for the benefit of the mortgagor, and the parties may waive or change the statutory place.⁵ A provision in the mortgage that the mortgaged property may be sold in a county other than that in which the mortgagor resides has been held not to waive a statutory requirement that the mortgage be filed in the county where the sale is to take place.⁶

If the circumstances require, it has been held that the sale may be or must be held at more than one place, even though the mortgage and an applicable statute contemplate but one place of sale.⁷

§ 375. — Presence of Property

The property ordinarily must be in plain view of the bidders at the time of the sale, unless it is impossible or impracticable to produce it, or the mortgagor has waived its presence.

In order better to realize the full value of the property sold, it is ordinarily held, under⁸ or apart from⁹ a statute so providing, that the property must be in plain view of the bidders at the time of the sale. However, it has been held that production of the property is not essential if impossible or impracticable.¹⁰ Moreover, the mortgagor may waive this condition,¹¹ it being for his benefit,¹² and will be held to have done so in case he refuses to produce the property on demand.¹³

§ 376. — Necessity for Public Sale

Although extremely desirable that the exercise of a power of sale without judicial proceedings be by public auction, unless prohibited by statute a private sale of mortgaged property is generally valid where it is authorized by the mortgagor.

If not absolutely necessary it is extremely desirable that the sale under the power should be by public auction, since the mortgagee by selling at private sale, although he does not lose his rights under the mortgage,¹⁴ will be held to strict account,¹⁵ and, as shown infra § 381, may be charged with the best price reasonably obtainable, or with the value of the property. Also, a purchaser at a private sale may be liable to other encumbrancers if he purchases with notice that the rights of such encumbrancers are being disregarded.¹⁶ Of course, where the mortgage so stipulates, the sale must be a public one,¹⁷ unless the mortgagor subsequently waives the requirement.¹⁸ On the other hand, unless such agreement is violative of statute or public policy,¹⁹ or is fraudulent as to third persons,²⁰ where authorized by the mortgagor, the property may be sold at private sale,²¹ particularly where such a stipulation appears in the mortgage,²² and, if only a private sale is provided for in the mortgage, a public sale will not be a valid foreclosure.²³ Indeed, a provision or agreement for a private sale has been held to be valid, even though a statute provides for foreclosure by public sale,²⁴ in which case the mortgagee may elect the method which he will pursue.²⁵

A private sale by the mortgagor with the consent of the mortgagee and an agreement to apply the proceeds on the mortgage debt, made in good faith and for full value, has been held equivalent to a foreclosure of the mortgage.²⁶

§ 377. — Sale in Bulk or Parcels

Unless the mortgage prescribes how the chattels shall be sold, the chattels may be sold separately, in lots, or all together, as may best suit the buyers' convenience and insure the largest returns.

In the absence of a provision in the mortgage prescribing the manner in which the chattels shall be sold, the mortgagee in selling is required only to act in entire good faith, and is not bound by any fixed rule as to sale in bulk or in parcels,²⁷ but must sell the articles separately, in lots, or all together, as may best suit the convenience of buyers and insure the largest returns.²⁸ A sale in bulk is not oppressive or unfair if the value of the property depends largely on its being dealt with as a whole and such a sale will be as advantageous to the mortgagor as a sale of the parts separately.²⁹ A sale of the mortgaged chattels in bulk with other chattels for a lump sum is improper,³⁰ unless the sale be with the consent of the mortgagor and be advantageous and without a wrongful motive.³¹ Where the mortgage expressly so provides, the mortgagee may be required to sell in bulk³² or in parcels.³³ Where the mortgage contemplates a sale of so much of the property only as may be necessary to discharge the debt, the property must be offered in such lots or parcels as will suit the convenience of bidders and comport with the character of the property to be sold, and it is not proper to sell the property in gross.³⁴ Where the mortgagor authorizes the mortgagee to sell at public auction or private sale and either in bulk or by single article and with or without notice, it has been held that the mortgagee may sell at retail in the ordinary course of trade.³⁵

§ 378. — Person Conducting Sale

Generally speaking, a provision in the mortgage or a statute specifying by whom the sale shall be made must be complied with, and such person must be personally present and supervise the sale.

Generally, where the mortgage³⁶ or statute³⁷ specifies by whom the sale shall be made, its terms must be followed. The person designated cannot lawfully delegate his power,³⁸ unless the mortgagor agrees thereto³⁹ expressly or by clear implication,⁴⁰ but must be personally present and supervise the sale. Where it is not made a part of the sheriff's legal duties to foreclose mortgages he, in conducting a mortgage sale, acts as the private agent of the mortgagee.⁴¹ Where a statute provides that the method provided in the mortgage for foreclosure shall be exclusive, a sheriff cannot claim that he took possession and sold in his official character where the mortgage provides that the mortgagee shall take possession and make disposition of the mortgaged property.⁴² If the sale is conducted by the mortgagor as the mortgagee's agent, the mortgagee is bound by any representations and warranties made by such agent.⁴³ It is improper for the auctioneer to act as agent for the buyer.⁴⁴

§ 379. — Terms of Sale

Although there is authority to the contrary, unless otherwise authorized by the mortgagor the sale should be for cash.

In the absence of a provision in the mortgage specifying the terms of sale, the sale, according to some authority, must be for cash,⁴⁵ although according to other authority, the sale may properly be on credit,⁴⁶ within the discretion of the auctioneer.⁴⁷ Where the mortgage itself so provides, it is the mortgagee's duty to sell for cash,⁴⁸ or on such terms as he deems advantageous and proper.⁴⁹ However, it is held that even if it is the mortgagee's duty to sell for cash, a sale for credit is not void,⁵⁰ at least if it has been ratified by the mortgagor and his creditors,⁵¹ and the only penalty for a breach of the duty is to hold the mortgagee responsible for the damages caused thereby.⁵²

A power of sale is ordinarily held to confer no right to barter or exchange the property for property other than money,⁵³ except, perhaps, where the goods bartered for are taken in at a cash valuation and credited on the debt.⁵⁴ Where the sale is for cash, the purchaser cannot offset debts which he holds against the mortgagor,⁵⁵ but the person conducting the sale may accept in part payment a claim for keeper's fees arising after the seizure of the property and pending sale.⁵⁶ Where the mortgagee is permitted to purchase, he is entitled to the bill of sale without payment of any money to the officer making the sale, if the amount of his bid is less than the amount due him.⁵⁷

The terms of sale must not be such as will tend unnecessarily to discourage bidding,⁵⁸ but the fact that the terms are cash on the day of the sale has been held not to be so prejudicial to the mortgagor as to invalidate the sale as a matter of law.⁵⁹

§ 380. — Amount to Be Sold

The mortgagee is bound to sell only so much of the property as is necessary to satisfy his claim if he can do so without prejudice to himself or the mortgagor. Having sold that amount, his right of possession and title to the remainder is terminated.

Where the mortgagee may, without prejudice or great inconvenience to himself, satisfy his claim by a sale of a part of the mortgaged property, and the interests of the mortgagor require it, he is bound so to sell.⁶⁰ However, it is of no consequence that he sells slightly more than the amount of the indebtedness, provided the surplus is returned to the mortgagor.⁶¹ Moreover, the fact that more than enough is sold to discharge the mortgage debt will not render the sale void.⁶² On the other hand, the mere fact that a sale of part would protect the mortgagee's interest will not render oppressive or unfair a sale of the whole if the value of the property depends largely on its being dealt with as a whole and a sale of the whole will be as advantageous to the mortgagor as a sale of part.⁶³

When sufficient of the property has been sold to pay the whole debt and the expenses of the sale, the mortgagee's right of possession is terminated⁶⁴ and his title extinguished;⁶⁵ but where the proceeds of a partial sale are insufficient to pay the mortgage debt and expenses, the lien on the remaining property is not discharged.⁶⁶ There is an implied agreement that the balance unsold be restored to the mortgagor,⁶⁷ and if the mortgagee proceeds to sell the residue notwithstanding enough have been sold to pay the debt and costs, it is a conversion of the chattels for which he is liable to the mortgagor.⁶⁸ However, although the mortgagee must surrender such surplus on demand, he is under no duty or obligation to return it to the mortgagor's premises.⁶⁹

Mere inadequacy of the price will not invalidate the sale, but the mortgagee is liable for the deficiency if he fails to exercise reasonable diligence to sell for the best price obtainable.

The mere inadequacy of the price for which the property was sold will not invalidate the sale⁷⁰ for fraud,⁷¹ although it is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether the mortgagee acted in good faith and with reasonable care.⁷² In determining what was an adequate price, the condition of the goods and all the circumstances of the sale should be taken into consideration.⁷³ An agreement between bidders as to the price will not invalidate the sale unless it tends to stifle bidding and

Value exceeding debt

The mere fact that value of property covered by chattel mortgage was greater than mortgage debt is insufficient to impeach a sale for the amount of the debt, where it was fairly conducted.—Credit Service Co. v. Furney, 271 P. 738, 128 Or. 21.

to prevent competition.⁷⁴

Where the foreclosure sale is properly conducted the mortgagor is entitled to credit only for the amount realized by the sale and not for the value of the property sold;⁷⁵ but the mortgagee is liable for the deficiency if he failed to exercise reasonable diligence to secure the best price obtainable,⁷⁶ at least where the sale was a private one.⁷⁷ Indeed, it has been held that a mortgagee by selling at a private sale will render himself liable to the mortgagor for any damages which the latter may have suffered by reason of his failure to sell publicly, to the extent of the difference between the price realized and the actual value of the property above the mortgage debt.⁷⁸

Although the property advances in value after the sale, the mortgagee is not bound to account for more than the sum realized at the sale in the absence of fraud,⁷⁹ but the mortgagor is entitled to the benefit of profits made by a resale of the property a short time after it had been purchased by the mortgagee at the foreclosure sale.⁸⁰

§ 382. — Persons Who May Purchase

Although in some jurisdictions a mortgagee, unless the mortgagor consents thereto, is prohibited from purchasing at his own sale, in other jurisdictions he may do so if the sale is fairly made. The mortgagor may purchase.

In some jurisdictions, in the absence of statutory permission, the mortgagee is prohibited from purchasing at his own sale, either directly or through the medium of an agent, and in case of such a purchase the mortgagee must account for the actual value of the property mortgaged.⁸¹ In other jurisdictions, however, although such a sale will be set aside more readily,⁸² such a sale is not void, but only voidable,⁸³ and under, or apart from, a statute to that effect, will not be set aside if fairly made, even though the mortgagor did not expressly assent to the mortgagee's purchasing the property.⁸⁴ In any event, it would seem that the mortgagor

Analogy to purchase by sheriff

Under statutes to that effect, the position of a chattel mortgagee purchasing at his own sale is analogous to that of a sheriff purchasing at an execution sale conducted by him, in which case the sale is voidable, if not void.—Henderson v. Fisher, 176 P. 63, 38 Cal.App. 270.

Equity of redemption is not extinguished by such a sale and purchase.

Agent

The fact that the person conducting the sale arranged to have another bid on the property has been held not to invalidate the sale.—Davenport v. San Antonio Machine & Supply Co., supra.

Purchase by corporation

(1) The mortgagee's corporation or a corporation in which he has a director's vote may purchase at a sale by the mortgagee only if the circumstances show fair dealing and good faith on the part of the mortgagee.—Graves v. Negy, 219 P. 286, 114 Kan. 373.

(2) However, it has been held that the fact that the person conducting the sale was a stockholder in the mortgagee corporation will not invalidate a sale at which the latter was the purchaser.—Davenport v. San Antonio Machine & Supply Co., Tex.Civ.App., 59 S.W.2d 207, error refused.

Sales statute held inapplicable

A statute requiring the seller at an auction sale to reserve the right to bid is inapplicable to sales under chattel mortgages.—Alchin v. Supreme Milk & Cream Co., 169 A. 837, 12 N.J.Misc. 94.

may consent to a purchase by the mortgagee.⁸⁵ The mortgagee cannot question the regularity of a sale at which he is a purchaser,⁸⁶ nor can a creditor of the mortgagor where the mortgagor acquiesces in the sale.⁸⁷ A second valid sale may be made notwithstanding the invalidity of a previous sale at which the mortgagee bid in the property for himself.⁸⁸

In some jurisdictions which recognize that the sale is only voidable, a mortgagor contesting the validity of a sale must affirmatively prove the defect claimed to render it voidable.⁸⁹ However, the more generally accepted rule is that the burden is on the mortgagee to show that the sale was regularly and fairly conducted in every particular, and that an adequate price was paid for the goods sold;⁹⁰ and if he cannot sustain this burden, the sale will be set aside at the election of the mortgagor.⁹¹

The mortgagor may purchase at a foreclosure sale,⁹² and so may his wife.⁹³

Necessity of prompt objection. The mortgagor must act with reasonable promptness in objecting to the sale.⁹⁴

§ 383. — Report of Sale

Where a statute so provides, the mortgagee must deliver a report of the sale to the mortgagor within a specified time thereafter, or file an affidavit giving the particulars of the sale.

Where a statute so provides, the mortgagee must deliver to the mortgagor a report of the sale within a specified time thereafter,⁹⁵ containing such information as the name of the purchaser⁹⁶ and the expenses of the sale,⁹⁷ and properly signed.⁹⁸ However, the mortgagor may waive the requirement of the statute;⁹⁹ but the fact that the mortgagor surrendered possession, where he had no knowledge of the sale,¹ or that he made no inquiry,² or was not injured by his lack of knowledge,³ will not excuse a failure to give a proper report; nor will a failure to make a report be excused on the ground that the mortgagor's whereabouts could not be ascertained, where his post office address was known.⁴ The statute has been held inapplicable where the sale was unauthorized, and the burden of proving a sale under a power contained in the mortgage is on the mortgagor.⁵ However, such a sale will be assumed where the mortgagee admits that the steps taken by him to acquire possession were under and pursuant to his rights under the mortgage.⁶

Under other statutes so providing, the mortgagee must file an affidavit within a specified time after the sale giving particulars thereof,⁷ containing a detailed statement of the expenses of the sale, and a copy of the notice of sale.⁸

An officer may, under leave of court, amend his return of sale under the mortgage where no rights of third persons have intervened.⁹ The person conducting the sale is the agent of the mortgagee or the owner of the mortgage, and the proper person to make the report of the sale.¹⁰ Where a statute so provides, the report is prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated.¹¹

§ 384. Operation and Effect

A sale authorized by the mortgage or the parties has the same effect as a foreclosure in court; it is absolute, and not subject to collateral attack; and it extinguishes the mortgage if the proceeds equal the debt.

11. N.D.—Hellstrom v. First Guaranty Bank, supra.

A sale of mortgaged property under a power in the mortgage¹² or with the consent of the interested parties¹³ has the same effect as a foreclosure by an action in court, and, so far as the rights of third persons are concerned, stands on the same footing.¹⁴ Such a sale is ordinarily absolute,¹⁵ and, as hereinafter discussed in § 435, extinguishes the mortgagor's equity of redemption. It generally has the same effect as res judicata as a foreclosure by an action in court,¹⁶ and is not subject to collateral attack.¹⁷ Thus it has been held to set at rest, and not to be subject to collateral attack because of, objections going to the sufficiency of the description of the property in the mortgage,¹⁸ the recording of the mortgage,¹⁹ the fact that the mortgage debt was not the debt of the mortgagor corporation,²⁰ the right of the mortgagee to apply payments by the mortgagor, before foreclosure, to debts other than that secured by the mortgage,²¹ and the amount due.²² However, a sale of property not included in the mortgage is subject to collateral attack.²³

Where the foreclosure is under a power of sale, the mortgage becomes an executed contract,²⁴ and if the proceeds equal or exceed the amount of the debt and the expenses of the sale, the mortgage is extinguished.²⁵ A sale of a part of the property has been held not to extinguish the mortgage lien on the portion unsold unless the amount realized at the sale is more than the debt;²⁶ but it has been held that the purchase of a portion of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee will extinguish the mortgage to the extent of the proportion in value that the portion purchased by the mortgagee bears to the entire property mortgaged.²⁷ Where the proceeds of sale are turned over to the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy, the debt is not discharged pro tanto.²⁸ If the proceeds do not exceed the amount of the debt, the sale will extinguish the lien of an inferior mortgage,²⁹ and the inferior mortgagee cannot recover the amount of his mortgage from the holder of the prior mortgage.³⁰

§ 385. Title and Rights of Purchaser

Generally speaking, a purchaser at a lawful foreclosure sale acquires the interests which the mortgagor had in the property when executing the mortgage, and the mortgagee's rights. Ordinarily his title depends on the validity of proceedings before and including the sale, not on what should be done thereafter.

Generally speaking, a purchaser at a lawful foreclosure sale acquires all the interests which the

Objection by subsequent mortgagee

Where a statutory notice of sale under a first mortgage was properly given and the property was sold without an objection or an attempt by a subsequent mortgagee to remove the proceedings to court, and in a subsequent action by such mortgagee to foreclose his own mortgage he was permitted to contest the validity of the sale to the same extent as if the proceedings had been removed, such mortgagee could not object on appeal that he was not notified of the sale.—*Inland Finance Co. v. Material alteration

Where a chattel mortgage has been so materially altered as to be void, the purchaser at a foreclosure sale cannot maintain any action on the altered mortgage.—Bowser v. Cole, 11 S.W. 1131, 74 Tex. 222.

Property not included in mortgage

(1) A purchaser at such a sale acquires no title to property not covered by the mortgage.—Willis v. Thomason, 1 La.App. 313—11 C.J. p 713 note 11 [a].

(2) Where the mortgage was not intended to cover property acquired by the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage, a purchaser of such property at a foreclosure sale under the mortgage acquires no title thereto.

Ploeger, supra.

(4) Such purchaser is chargeable with value of after acquired goods which he purchased at foreclosure sale.—J. P. Manning Co. v. Kempainen, supra.

Joinder of purchaser in action

Sale will not be set aside or resale of goods ordered, on ground that mortgage is void as to mortgagor's creditors, in suit to which the purchaser, who is the holder of legal title, is not party.—Arnesto Paint Co. v. Brush, 175 A. 902, 117 N.J.Eq. 368.

Sale under second mortgage

(1) The purchaser at a sale under a second mortgage simply steps into the place of the mortgagor and holds his title subject to the prior mortgage.—Finkel v. Lepkin, 41 A. 718, 62 N.J.Law 530.

(2) He is not, however, precluded from denying the validity of an older mortgage simply because the sale was made subject to such older mortgage.—White v. Graves, 68 Mo. 218.

Unrecorded mortgage

(1) A purchaser at a sale under an unrecorded mortgage is in no better position than the mortgagee would have been as against creditors of the mortgagor.—Davis v. Dugy, 3 Tex.A. Civ.Cas. § 334.

(2) Where a mortgage is void because of failure to record, the mortgagee acquires no greater rights by purchasing the property under an attempted foreclosure.

whether the mortgage is a live instrument,⁴³ but there is a warranty or representation by the mortgagee that he has a subsisting mortgage.⁴⁴

As regards the effect of the foreclosure proceedings upon the purchaser's title, such title ordinarily depends on the validity of the proceedings prior to, and including, the sale, not on what should be done thereafter by the person making the sale.⁴⁵ Thus a failure on the part of the person conducting the sale to execute a bill of sale to the purchaser,⁴⁶ or to transmit a return of the proceedings,⁴⁷ has been held not to invalidate the title acquired by the purchaser. In the absence of a statute so requiring, a recording of the bill of sale is not necessary,⁴⁸ and the validity of such a bill is not affected by the fact that the bill was acknowledged before the mortgagee's attorney.⁴⁹ Leaving the chattels on the land at the request of the owner of the latter has been held not to affect the purchaser's title.⁵⁰

Proof. In an action against a third person to enforce his title, the purchaser must produce evidence that he has purchased property covered by a valid and existing mortgage.⁵¹ A purchaser maintaining an action to recover the consideration paid, on the ground that the mortgage had been discharged before the foreclosure, has the burden of proving such discharge.⁵²

§ 386. Proceeds of Sale

A mortgagee foreclosing by a sale without judicial proceedings is strictly accountable for the proceeds, including any surplus after satisfying the mortgage debt.

A mortgagee foreclosing his chattel mortgage by a sale without judicial proceedings is strictly accountable for the proceeds of the sale.⁵³ If a surplus remains after satisfying the mortgage debt, he holds such surplus as a trustee for one entitled thereto,⁵⁴ and must account therefor.⁵⁵ An action will lie to compel him to render an account,⁵⁶ or an action in trover, or assumpsit, or some other form may be maintained for a surplus.⁵⁷

The mortgagee is liable for interest on any surplus unreasonably detained by him, but not for profits from the property unless received before the sale.⁵⁸

§ 387. — Rights in and Application in General

After payment of expenses, the proceeds must ordinarily be credited on the mortgage debt and any surplus paid to the mortgagor. As among several debts secured, the mortgagee may ordinarily elect which he will credit; in case part of the debt is otherwise secured, the other part may be credited. Nonexempt property must be sold first.

Although the proceeds of a sale under a chattel mortgage are in no sense to be regarded as a voluntary payment, the application of which the debtor has authority to direct,⁵⁹ after payment of the expenses the net proceeds must ordinarily be credited to the mortgagor as a payment on account of the mortgage debt;⁶⁰ and the mortgagor is, as against the mortgagee, entitled to all sums realized in excess of such debt and expenses.⁶¹ However, until the mortgage debt and all reasonable expenses of foreclosure have been fully satisfied and there is a surplus remaining, he has no rights in any part of the property seized for sale or in its proceeds.⁶² Pending an action for the property by a third person, the mortgagee is not required to apply the proceeds of sale to the mortgage debt.⁶³

Generally speaking, a mortgagee is not entitled to apply the proceeds on a debt not secured by the mortgage,⁶⁴ unless the mortgagor consents to such an application.⁶⁵ In some jurisdictions, the debtor's consent to such an application cannot be presumed,⁶⁶ but there is authority holding that a surplus remaining after applying the proceeds to the mortgage debt may be applied to an unsecured indebtedness of the mortgagor in the absence of an agreement to the contrary.⁶⁷ If the proceeds of sale have been applied to the payment of the mortgage debt, such application cannot be changed without mutual consent.⁶⁸ However, if there are prior liens or encumbrances, the proceeds should be applied first to such liens or encumbrances, as shown infra § 389, and then to the mortgage debt,⁶⁹ to the extent of the mortgage lien,⁷⁰ without any order of court, if the property is not in custodia legis or sold under order of court.⁷¹

Several debts secured. Where there are several debts secured and the proceeds are not sufficient to pay all of them, the mortgagee may elect as to which debts he will apply the property.⁷² Accordingly, if the mortgage is given to secure the payment of various notes, but does not specify what claims shall be paid first, nor the order of their payment, the mortgagee can apply the proceeds of the mortgaged property, in its discretion, to any of the claims which the mortgage was given to secure.⁷³ Where the mortgage stipulates that the entire debt shall become due on default in payment of any of the notes secured, and there is no direction by the debtor, the mortgagee may apply the sum realized on a sale of the property on nonpayment of the first maturing note as a credit on any of the notes.⁷⁴ Where a trust deed requires the trustee to appropriate the proceeds of sale to payment of the notes secured, it has been held that he should, where the notes are payable to different persons and the proceeds of sale are insufficient to pay them in full, apply such proceeds pro rata in part payment.⁷⁵

The mortgagee has no right to apply the proceeds of sale in payment of part of the mortgage debt

Mortgagor's conversion of unsold property is no defense in an action by the mortgagor to recover a surplus remaining after a sale of the other property by the mortgagee.—Bryson v. Watson, 160 So. 532, 230 Ala. 221.

Refusal of affirmative charge requested by the mortgagor in an action for money had and received by the mortgagee at a foreclosure sale was erroneous where the evidence was undisputed that the mortgagor was entitled to recover in some amount.—Bryson v. Watson, 160 So. 532, 230 Ala. 221.

Stipulation not fraudulent

An additional clause in a power of sale that the mortgagee shall hold the surplus proceeds subject to the mortgagor's order does not render the transaction fraudulent.—Coulter v. Lumpkin, 14 S.E. 614, 88 Ga. 277.

Other security for part of debt. If the proceeds are insufficient to satisfy the entire debt, and the mortgagee has security other than the mortgage for part of the debt, he may apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of the debt secured only by the mortgage,⁷⁷ and in case there is other security for a portion of the notes secured by the mortgage, the mortgagee may apply the proceeds of sale first to the notes otherwise unsecured.⁷⁸

Exempt and nonexempt property. Where the mortgage covers exempt and nonexempt property, the mortgagor is entitled to have the nonexempt property first sold and applied to the payment of the debt,⁷⁹ and a mortgagee who has misapplied funds derived from the nonexempt property to other debts cannot resort to the proceeds of the exempt property.⁸⁰ However, a mortgagee holding also a lien on property not covered by the mortgage and exempt except for the lien is not bound to apply the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property to the discharge of the lien against the exempt property.⁸¹

§ 388. — Marshaling Assets

A senior mortgagee with notice of a junior mortgage on part of the property must first exhaust the part not covered by both mortgages, or, if necessary to avoid discrimination, apportion his satisfaction among the proceeds of the respective parts, unless he will thereby be prejudiced or suffer risks or burdens not assumed.

As a general rule, the holder of a mortgage on property on part of which there is a junior mortgage of which he has actual notice is required to protect the junior mortgagee by first exhausting that portion of the property not covered by both mortgages.⁸² Where necessary in order to avoid discrimination between several junior claimants, each claiming the proceeds of only a part of the property, the satisfaction of the prior lien or mortgage may be required to be apportioned among the proceeds of the respective pieces of property.⁸³

However, these principles are not to be applied in such a manner as to prejudice the senior lienholder,⁸⁴ or to impose risks or burdens on him which he has not assumed.⁸⁵ The rule has also been held inapplicable when the additional property covered by the senior mortgage is ordinarily exempt from the claims of the mortgagor's creditors.⁸⁶ Where a portion of the property covered by the mortgage has been transferred by the mortgagor, the transferee,⁸⁷ or a subordinate claimant of other property in the mortgage,⁸⁸ may compel the mortgagee to resort first to that which is retained by the mortgagor, where so to do will not require him to incur a risk of loss, or delay or inconvenience him in enforcing his claim. However, the mortgagee is not required to use diligence in locating property other than that claimed by the subordinate claimant.⁸⁹ Where mortgaged property is subsequently mortgaged to different persons, in separate parcels, and the first mortgagee sells both parcels at different times, the proceeds of neither sale being alone sufficient to discharge his mortgage debt, but the proceeds of both being more than sufficient, the mortgagee who holds a second mortgage on the second parcel of property sold cannot insist that the entire proceeds of the parcel first sold be applied to the senior encumbrance, before resorting to the proceeds of the sale of the property covered by his mortgage.⁹⁰ Where a surety on a mortgage joined purely for the accommodation of the principal, the principal cannot complain of the application of the proceeds of the property of the surety covered by the mortgage to a prior unrecorded mortgage executed by the surety on such property.⁹¹

§ 389. — Rights of Third Persons

The proceeds of a foreclosure of a chattel mortgage without judicial proceedings should be applied first to the payment of prior liens or encumbrances, then to junior liens, and, after the claims of lienholders have been satisfied, general creditors of the mortgagor may reach the surplus.

the proceeds of a foreclosure without judicial proceedings should be applied first to the discharge of such liens or encumbrances.⁹² After prior liens or encumbrances have been satisfied, junior lienholders are entitled to have any surplus proceeds applied on their claims.⁹³ The proceeds must not be applied on a debt not secured by the mortgage,⁹⁴ or turned over to unsecured creditors,⁹⁵ to the detriment of junior lienholders. Where a claim is subsequent to the chattel mortgage claim but is entitled to a statutory priority over a claim which is prior to the mortgage, it should be satisfied from the portion of the proceeds applicable to the claim prior to the mortgage, but should not be given priority to the mortgage lien by indirection.⁹⁶ The general creditors of the mortgagor,⁹⁷ creditors who have garnished the mortgagee,⁹⁸ judgment creditors whose judgments are subsequent to the mortgage,⁹⁹ an assignee of the mortgagor,¹ a receiver of the property of the mortgagor,² and a purchaser of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor,³ have sale for his security, or until indemnified or relieved from liability.¹⁰ Where a trust created on surplus proceeds by the mortgagor for the benefit of a third person fails, the mortgagor becomes entitled to such proceeds.¹¹

§ 390. Deficiency and Personal Liability

If the proceeds of the foreclosure sale are insufficient to pay the mortgage debt, the mortgagee is ordinarily entitled to recover the deficiency from the mortgagor, unless the mortgagee accepted the property in satisfaction of the debt, or unless the foreclosure and sale was irregular or wrongful. In the action the general rules of procedure apply.

If the proceeds of a proper foreclosure sale are insufficient to pay the mortgage debt, the mortgagor is personally liable for any deficiency,¹² unless the mortgagee accepted the property from the mortgagor in satisfaction of the debt.¹³ However, a failure to foreclose and sell in strict compliance with the manner prescribed by statute prevents the maintenance of an action to collect a deficiency,¹⁴ especially where the statute so provides;¹⁵ and this has been held to be so even where the mortgagor has waived the statutory method.¹⁶ So, the failure of the mortgagee to sell the property for the best price obtainable,¹⁷ or a foreclosure made maliciously and in bad faith and for motives not contemplated or provided for in the mortgage,¹⁸ prevents the recovery of a deficiency judgment by the mortgagee; and, in a suit for a deficiency, proof that the foreclosure and sale were invalid and that the mortgagee purchased the mortgaged property at such sale and thereafter sold a part thereof for more than the mortgage debt establishes a wrongful conversion of the property by the mortgagee and entitles the mortgagor to credit therefor.¹⁹

An action for the amount of a deficiency is not precluded by a statute allowing but one action to recover a secured debt, since after a sale of the property the debt is no longer a secured debt.²⁰

Such a deficiency cannot be recovered except by an action against the mortgagor.²¹ The mortgagee must allege and prove a sale of the mortgaged property,²² and is limited to a recovery based on the pleadings.²³ The mortgagee has the burden of proving such a breach of the mortgage as will justify the sale;²⁴ but the burden of proving matters in defense, such as fraud in the foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee,²⁵ or the value of the chattels possessed by the mortgagee,²⁶ is on the mortgagee.

In an action for a deficiency arising on the sale of the mortgaged property, findings of the jury based on competent evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.²⁷

§ 391. Fees and Costs

The right of the mortgagee to retain from the proceeds of sale the expenses and fees incurred is considered infra §§ 430-431.

§ 392. Wrongful or Irregular Seizure or Sale

The rights and liabilities arising from the wrongful or irregular seizure or sale of the mortgaged property are treated infra §§ 393-397.

sale which recites mortgagor's default does not relieve party relying on sale of necessity of proving default justifying sale.—Advance-Rumely Thresher Co. v. Kruger, supra.

Sale prior to termination of replevin suit

Where mortgagee instituting replevin action to foreclose mortgage obtains possession of property by filing replevin bond, sale thereof at foreclosure sale prior to determination of issues entitles defendant to damages by way of cross petition in same action, or by set-off against mortgage debt to extent of reasonable market value of property, if it is less than debt and not merely for the amount for which the property was sold.—Tingley v. Smith, 72 P.2d 729, 181 Okl. 84—Scott v. Standridge, 245 P. 591, 117 Okl. 111—Mid-Continent Motor Securities Co. of Tulsa v. Art Harris Transfer & Storage Co. of Muskogee, 223 P. 130, 97 Okl. 139—Salisbury v. First Nat. Bank, 221 P. 444, 99 Okl. 138.

Wrongful foreclosure essential

Actions for wrongful foreclosure of chattel mortgage, and conspiracy to defraud, cannot be maintained, in absence of illegality or wrongful acts in foreclosure proceedings.—Antoine v. Commonwealth Trust Co., 165 N.E. 12, 266 Mass. 202.

Bad faith

Mortgagee, who in collusion with another with intent to defraud mortgagor takes possession and sells property under clause in mortgage authorizing him to do so whenever he feels himself insecure, does not act in good faith.—Wettlin v. Jones, 234 P. 515, 32 Wyo. 446, rehearing denied 236 P. 246, 236 P. 247, 32 Wyo. 446.

Conspiracy to cause default

If default or conditions that caused mortgagee to feel insecure were brought about by him in collusion or conspiracy with third person, foreclosure following default was unlawful act.—Wettlin v. Jones, supra.

Court process required

Chattel mortgagee who had sold

§ 393. — Rights of Mortgagor in General; Damages

A mortgagee is liable to the mortgagor for the wrongful seizure and sale of the mortgaged property, unless the latter assents to the sale or waives his rights therein, the mortgagor generally being entitled to the full value of the property less the amount of the mortgage debt. In an action therefor the general rules of procedure apply.

A mortgagee²⁸ or assignee of the mortgagee²⁹ who takes possession of and sells the mortgaged property in such a manner as to constitute an invalid foreclosure of the mortgage is accountable for its market value at the instance and election of the mortgagor or those claiming under him, and is liable in damages for any injury caused by a wrongful seizure and sale,³⁰ as well as for liquidated damages expressly authorized by statute in addition to actual damages for the failure to comply with specific statutory requirements,³¹ unless, as appears infra § 397, the latter consents to the sale or waives irregularities therein; but a mortgagor who at the time summarily, instead of by court process, cotton covered by chattel mortgage was properly charged with loss resulting from temporarily depressed market.—Stedham v. Swift & Co., C.C.A.Ga., 79 F.2d 648.

Payment

Payee of mortgage note, pledged to him as collateral security for note secured by lien on crop, from proceeds of sale of which payee's advances to make crop were repaid, should not have sued out execution on mortgage and note secured thereby, in absence of proof that note was repledged to him as security for subsequent advances or indebtedness.—Polito v. Ferraro, La.App., 155 So. 477.

31. Wis.—Banking Commission of Wisconsin v. Ray, 253 N.W. 556, 214 Wis. 433.

Person entitled

Mortgagor's wife, who signed as mortgagor with him, being a person personally liable for the indebtedness, is entitled to statutory liquidated damages for failure of the mortgagee to give her notice of the sale of his intention to take the property and for failure to file an affidavit giving the details of the sale.—Banking Commission of Wisconsin v. Ray, supra.

Knowledge of sale

The fact that the mortgagor obtained knowledge of the terms, conditions and name of the purchaser of the mortgaged chattels after the sale will not constitute a defense to an action for the statutory penalty for failure of the mortgagee to give the mortgagor such information within a specified time after the sale.—McMahel v. Smith, 258 Ill.App. 53.
